COL. ALLEN DISLOYAL.

Forest Reserve Man in Land Frauds.

Los Angeles Agent is Made a Defendant in Suit to Annul Timber Entries.

Action is Brought to Declare Void All Filings and Relinquishments.

Many Men are Implicated in Famous Frauds of Hyde and Benson.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] the suit involving land frauds in California, Oregon and Nebraska and implicating Col. B. F. Allen of Los Angeles, a forest superintendent of California, Grant I. Taggart, a former forest superintendent, and other officials of the General Land Office at Washington, reveals clearly one of the methods employed in the perpetration of the land frauds and it is regarded by the authorities of far-reaching importance.

The title of the suit is the United States of America vs. Frederick Hyde, John A. Benson, Clifford W. Clarke, Bartlett Richards and J. J. Carnes, individually and as corporations doing business under the title and name of the Richards & Carnes Cattle Company, and T. H. Stenaman individually and as a corporation doing business under the title and name of R. M. Faddis & Co.

CONSPIRACY CHARGED.

The bill of complaint states that the defendants, Hyde and Benson, conspired with other parties, unlawfully and to appropriate to their own use, through pretended compliance with the Federal laws, large tracts of public land. They are also accused of having obtained from California and Oregon forest reserve lands for which they applied for patent and purchase, using fictitious names and caused the land to be relinquished to the United States by means of false and forged relinquishments in exchange for public lands of the United States elsewhere and notably in the State of Nebraska.

OFFICE EMPLOYEES IMPLICATED.

The defendants are also charged with bringing into their service Woodford D. Harlan and William E. Volk, officials and employes of the General Land Office at Washington, who were rapidly to forward to the defendants information concerning the status of the General Land Office on all matters pertaining to the fraudulent operations and business, especially to their selection of lands based on the false and fictitious titles in California and Oregon, to be exchanged for lands elsewhere and to furnish instant information concerning any discovery of the land fraud of the defendants.

WAS ALLEN BRIBED?

It is further alleged that the defendants paid money and other valuable consideration to and brought into their service one B. F. Allen, a forest superintendent, and Grant I. Taggart, a former supervisor, who furnished the defendants advance information and knowledge relative to the forest lands and other lands eligible for exchange in Nebraska and elsewhere, and that in accord with the information thus obtained the defendants were able to procure patents on certain described tracts of land in California and which were subsequently exchanged for the equivalent of Nebraska lands.

SCHOOL LANDS TRADED.

Another feature of the case lies in the fact that the California and Oregon lands were school lands and not at all subject to entry by the ordinary homestead and preëmption laws and the exchange was made for Nebraska lands that were subject to entry.

The suit is brought to annul the original filings and relinquishments of the California and Oregon lands and to declare void the sale of the relinquishments and the appropriation of the substitute lands in Nebraska.

SITUATION IS SERIOUS.

Abregation of Special Privileges to American Fishermen on Newfoundland Coast.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. JOHNS (N. F.) Oct. 14.—The situation on the West Coast created by the abrogation of the special privileges granted to American fishermen is becoming serious. Two American vessels are now at Bonne Bay in quest of herring, but as there are none now in the bay no trouble has arisen. The fisheries department warden states that he will be powerless unless help is given if the herring do strike the bay, for the people have expressed their intention to sell bait to these vessels. The penalty of purchasing bait is confiscation of vessel and outfit.

A telegram from Bay St. George today states that two American captains have taken on board some thirty Newfoundlanders and proceeded to Sydney, N. S., where they will ship these men and return to Bay of Islands to catch herring. This is done to evade the foreign fishing vessels act, which prohibits masters of such vessels engaging any person to form part of their crew for catching bait on any part of the coast of Newfoundland.

Colorado Miner Picks up a Great Fortune After Spending a Very Small One.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Rasmus Hanson, widely known in the San Juan district of Colorado, is rich again. He has sold his Mountain Queen claim to a syndicate represented by State Senator James Owen of Cripple Creek for $1,000,000. It is located near Silverton.

Nearly fifteen years ago Hanson sold a mine near the Mountain Queen for $80,000, and while in England gave a banquet which the Prince of Wales, now King Edward, and other members of the nobility attended. Soon he was out of money, and he returned to find another mine. About a year ago he married Miss Laura Leesberg, a Denver cigar-stand girl, and will take her around the world.

MEXICO SAFE FOR GREENE.

Sandard Oil Crowd May Down Him North of the Line, but Not South of It—Doughty Colonel is Typical Man of the West and His Defeat Would be a Loss to the Country.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "The Standard Oil outfit which has been fighting Col. W. C. Greene, may down him in the United States, but it can never beat him in Mexico as he has practically the entire Mexican government back of him." This is the statement of James P. Casey of Cananea, Mex., who is in Denver.

Continuing, Mr. Casey said: "Col. Greene is a representative western man and if they succeed in downing him it will be a great loss to the West. He is hasty at times, but if he likes a man he will go the limit for him. He pays better wages than any other big western employer and gives his men a chance to come directly to him with their grievances.

"The fight against him was so bitter that I was approached by a man who said he was representing a man named Tostine and offered $50,000 cash for an adverse report on the Greene interests in Mexico. I made the man put it in writing and then gave the letters to the press of the country, just to show up the enemies of Greene."

PROFESSOR IN TROUBLE.

Indiana Savant is Charged With Calling Vermont's Governor a "Professional Man Butcher."

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SOUTH BEND (Ind.) Oct. 14.—Prof R. L. Greene, who is at the head of the department of pharmacy of Notre Dame University, was arrested today by United States Marshal Petit charging him with violating the postal laws. The charge is that he wrote and sent a postal card to the Governor of Vermont at the time a movement was launched to save from the gallows Mrs. Rodgers, who was convicted of murder, denouncing the proposed execution. Across the corner of the card was written "Professional man butcher."

Prof. Greene returned here tonight from Goshen, where he was arraigned and held to await the action of the Federal grand jury under $200 bonds, which he furnished.

BOERS BUNCOED.

Dutch Colonists Leave Mexico Owing to Inability to Get Titles to Their Land.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

EL PASO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Unable to acquire clear titles to their farms and harassed by a series of embarrassments, the Boers who settled in colonies of self-exiled Dutchmen from the Transvaal in Chihuahua, Mex., are scattering, leaving the sites of their colonies in the sister republic to seek homes where they may in the United States.

Gen. Ben Viljoen, who was promoter of the colonization project, and who advanced funds for bringing them across the water, has lost heavily. He left the colony a few days ago. Gen. Snyman and his family are practically the sole Boers remaining. They assert their intention of remainig in Chihuahua, and calling upon the Mexican government for protection and support.

NEEDS CHURCH MONEY.

Rockefeller to Raise the Price of Gasoline Because Automobiles are Popular.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Owing to the growth of interest in automobiling in this country, the Consolidated Gas Company finds it can no longer use gasoline in the enriching of its product.

Standard gasoline of 86 per cent. was today quoted at 17 cents a gallon wholesale; 19 cents was asked for the 88 per cent. variety, and 22 cents a gallon for the 90 per cent. grade.

The reason for the advance is that automobilists, who individualy use comparatively small quantities of gasoline, and do not stop to count their change when buying fuel, are willing to pay the fancy prices.

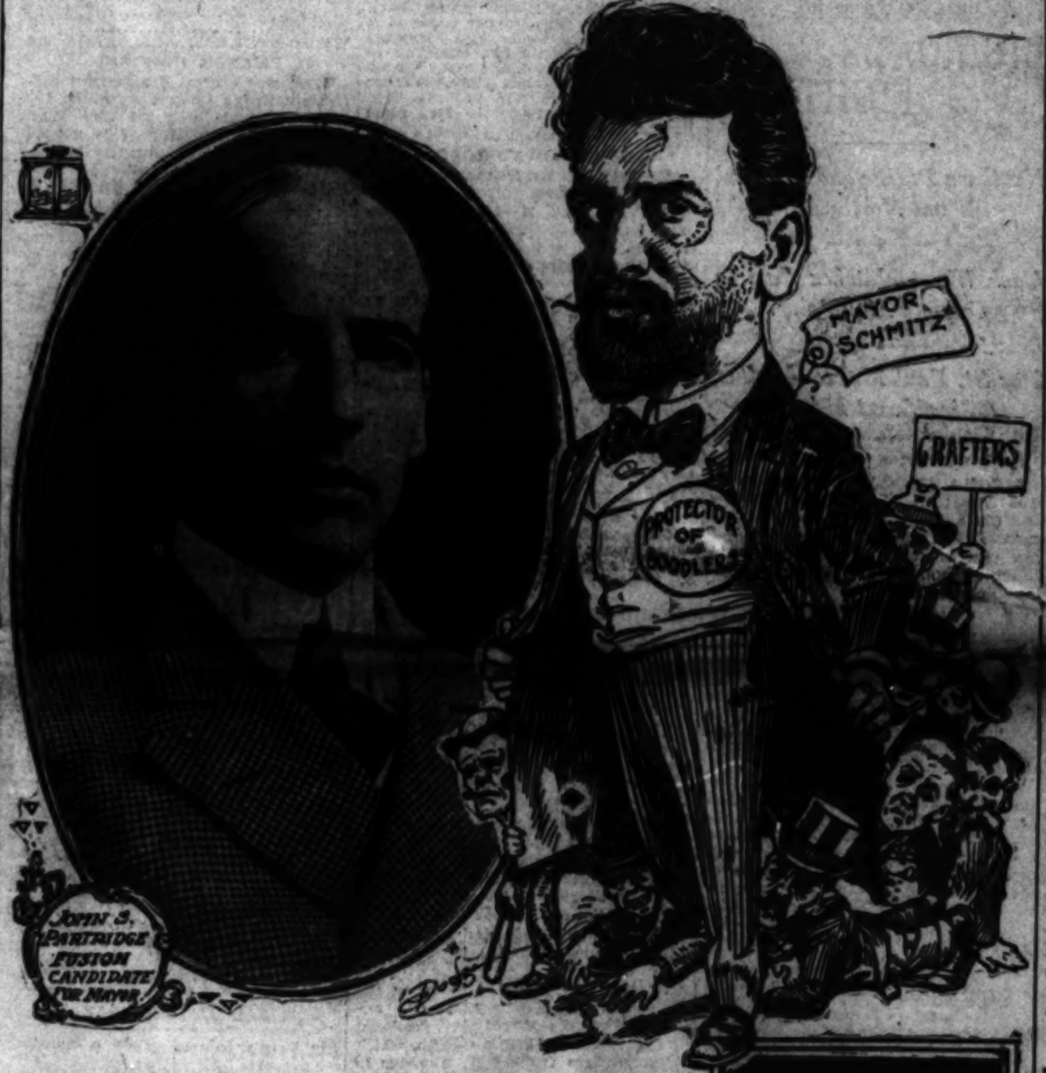
PLAYED TRICK ON SURGEONS.

OMAHA (Neb.) Oct. 14.—Frank McGinn, a railroad clerk, died in a hospital yesterday from a fall from an operating table to the cement floor. He met with an accident on the street, and was taken to the hospital unconscious, where he was revived by a medical student. McGinn was placed on an operating table, and left temporarily unattended. He was found later lying on the floor, with a fractured skull.

TRYING TO AWAKEN THE UNION BEDBUG.

Fusion Stunt in San Francisco's Novel Municipal Campaign.

Abe Ruef and Fiddler Schmitz Have Had Totemites Under a Spell and Aforesaid Nincompoops Have Got Worst of It—Ruef's Bossism Fiercest Yet—Exciting Night in the Northern City.



San Francisco's municipal campaign—Republicans and Democrats unite on Partridge against Ruef and Schmitz, leaders of the grafters and labor unionites.

ABE RUEF

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Two great Partridge meetings were held tonight, one in the Mission District where the mayoralty candidate and Brandenstein were chief speakers, another meeting at Twenty-fourth and Folsom and a third at Twenty-fourth and Church. There were large audiences at each place. Partridge has developed into one of the most effective campaign speakers San Francisco has known for years, with the single exception of Franklin K. Lane. He knows municipal matters thoroughly and he can discuss them in an interesting way. He can also roast Schmitz, Ruef and the grafters in a way that delights his audiences.

The Bulletin tonight made an attack on the character of the people who are booming Schmitz. It presented a full page picture of Schmitz with "Graft" stamped on his forehead and surrounded by pictures of saloons and gambling dens over which Schmitz banners and signs have been placed. It is a fact that every prominent Schmitz banner is either over a saloon or a crap game.

Mayor Schmitz spoke at three big meetings tonight. He is making a specialty of all kind of Catholic functions, speaking at fairs and bazaars and church festivals and several priests have actually offered up prayers for his retention in the office of Mayor.

Father Yorke, of course, is the promoter of all this impropriety.

A number of notable converts have been made to the Partridge cause since it has been thoroughly demonstrated that the fusion movement stands for a general cleaning out of the grafters and for putting square men in their places in the City Hall. A great deal is made of the announcement of Dr. John F. Dillon that he will do all in his power, this time, to defeat Schmitz. Dr. Dillon has twice been a candidate for Coroner on the Union Labor ticket, but now he is speaking for Partridge. Union labor men have tied up to Dr. Dillon in the past and he is expected to swing many of them over.

Pinhead McCarthy, who usually cuts more ice in San Francisco politics than he has been able to cut in Los Angeles, is going about boasting that he will swing every member of the Building Trades Council into line for Schmitz. If Pinhead does not carry out his promises any better than he did those he made before he last went to Los Angeles to "unionize" the building trades and drive non-union carpenters off the works, he will not make a great showing here on election day. Already other prominent members of the Building Trades Council are asserting that Schmitz will not get over half of its votes.

There is joy in the fusion headquarters over the reuniting of Democratic factions in several instances. Democratic leaders who have been at sword's points for years in the Twenty-eighth district, animated by the common desire to drive out Ruef's boodlers, have shaken hands and made up and are all pulling in harmony.

Old grievances in Republican circles, too, have been forgotten in the wave of harmony on which Partridge is riding. On the other hand Ruef has a hard task to manage his unruly elements.

AN OUTSIDER

Sees the Stirring Comedy.

BY HARRY C. CARR.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—With candidates tearing round in carriages from one hall to another, making stump speeches, this night saw the real beginning of San Francisco's funniest and fiercest municipal campaign.

It is the great wave of reform with the wreckage of Philadelphia's graft and St. Louis's scandal sousing in its foam.

Yet this purity campaign differs by being complicated with the bedbug-looking label of unionism.

To San Francisco it is real and tragic. The drums of the reform campaign wagons beat down Market street every day with a note almost as stirring as when that gloomy city cañon resounded with the drums of the regiments marching to the transports.

But to an outsider there is inevitably a touch of comic opera in it.

On the one side are the two great parties—the Republican and the Democratic banded together like brothers.

On the other side is a little lawyer—Abe Ruef—who has the exceeding good fortune to own a fiddler-Mayor named Schmitz, also to have the bedbug under a hypnotic spell.

He is the absolute "boss" of San Francisco.

The real issue of the campaign is whether or not the union bedbug shall be awakened from its Svengali sleep and throw off Ruef and Ruef's grafters.

If the bed bug happens to be jarred out of its trance, Ruef fears it may ask what good his celebrated "labor administration" has really done for the decent workingman during Schmitz's present term of office.

To which Abraham will only be able to reply feebly, "Didn't I let you put de union sign on all the boodle I got?"

"SCHMITZ'S BELLOW."

Ruef has sent "Smitty" and his heelers bellowing through the city warning union men that the fusion of the two parties is really a diabolical attempt on the part of "capital" to do some dreadful thing or other to the "poor downtrodden workingman"—possibly to eat the bed bug.

On a square "split" between labor union and "open shop" advocates, there is no doubt that San Francisco, with this administration as a horrible example, could vote down bed-buggery.

But for high motives, the great fusion parties have avoided in every way making labor-unionism or class strife an issue of this campaign.

The fusion candidate, John S. Partridge, says that the only plank in the platform is "Down with Ruef-Schmitz and graft."

Ruef frantically struggles to convince the voters that the single issue is labor-unionism.

The only deadly warning they sound is that, if Schmitz is defeated, from union thugs will be taken away the blessed privilege of assaulting non-union men without interference.

"You remember what the police did to you when Jimmy Phelan was Mayor," one of Schmitz's star orators cried the other night.

UNION THUGS TO GO FREE.

At this same political meeting the labor candidate for police judge actually guaranteed immunity from punishment to union thugs. His remarks were veiled but no one could fail to read his meaning clear.

In a subsequent article more of this disagreeable meeting wherein Schmitz and his men sought to inflame the basest motives in the basest men will be told.

So this then is the motif and scenario of this drama of San Fransisco's disgrace—the struggle by Ruef to drag unionism in—the others to keep it out.

A. Ruef, Esq., is a little, suave Jewish lawyer, about 40, judging by his appearance. Since Schmitz has been in office, his legal activities have been mainly limited to "getting through" petitions addressed to the Supervisors or other commissions.

The commissions always think just the way Abe does—great coincidence. He invariably charges $500 for "calling the matter to the attention of the commission."

Closed streets open, partitions that ought to come down stay up; policemen suddenly lose interest in unlawful "family entrances" at Abraham's slightest beck or nod.

He is a man with two great political gifts—he has a friendly, winning personality and a remarkable memory.

On a wager, Ruef once named 300 voters in one Assembly district, giving the street and number of half that many and some vital fact about each one.

Four years ago Ruef bolted out of the Republican party in direct violation of a promise to the party leaders.

He had a client named Eugene E. Schmitz, leader of the Columbia Theater Orchestra, who lived in proper awe of the union labor label and had

WORKING FRANCE.

Is Prey of Intriguing Diplomats.

Latest Incident to Hurt Feelings of Gauls is the Way Germany is Acting.

She Was Dangerously Near War With Kaiser Over Morocco Question.

Great Britain Stood Ready to Give Loyal Support if It Came to Carnage.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 14.—Public opinion has been wrought up during the past week by alleged revelations of Great Britain's readiness to invade Germany on behalf of France. These revelations, following the Franco-German controversy over Morocco and the open declaration of Prince von Bulow, the German Imperial Chancellor, favorable to a Russo-German rapprochement, created a feeling that France was the center of dangerous enmities and coalitions.

Although the alleged disclosures did not receive the slightest official recognition, they became the theme for discussion throughout Europe and the intimations that former Foreign Minister Delcasse was responsible for them led to violent attacks against him, one journal going so far as to accuse him of treason. M. Delcasse's repudiation of the reports, followed by the semi-official note of Friday, saying that the "published" reports upon the incidents accompanying the resignation of M. Delcasse, and notably the details regarding the Cabinet Council preceding his resignation, are "inexact," pricked the sensational bubble. But it had none the less served to excite intense political bitterness [illegible] the manoeuvers of [illegible] powers to readjust their [illegible] the expense of France.

From the mass of contradictory revelations and denials the fact stands out that the Morocco controversy took Germany and France dangerously near the verge of war, and that Great Britain, while not officially promising military aid, stood ready to give France her loyal support. The bitterness aroused by the incident is indicated by the calling of a special meeting of the Association of the Parisian Press for October 18 to consider charges made that certain journals are under the influence and in the pay of foreign governments.

BRITONS WANT WORK.

Unemployed of London to Call Upon King Edward to Talk About Their Troubles.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Even with the improvement in trade the ranks of the unemployed continue to swell. Not in any way discouraged by the refusal of King Edward to receive an army of unemployed workmen who proposed to march through the streets to Buckingham Palace, the wives and daughters of the East End unemployed are now organizing a great procession to march to the palace with a view of laying before the King a plain statement of their sufferings.

The final mass meeting of wives will be held on Monday week, and a few days later the order to march will be given. But what the unemployed expect the King to do for them has not been stated at any of the mass meetings of the unemployed.

MRS. TAGGART GETS "TIDDLES."

WOOSTER (O.) Oct. 14.—Judge Eason today decided that "Tiddles," the youngest child of the Taggarts, shall be left in the care of his mother, at Wooster. The elder boy may go with his father, who is now located at the Columbus barracks. Judge Eason decided that both children would, however, remain under the jurisdiction of the court, and the above arrangement might be changed later. Capt. Taggart will not prefer formal charges against Gen. Miner and Lieut. Fortesque as a result of the decision of Judge Eason.

IN MOURNING FOR IRVING.

England's Grief at Actor's Death is Deep.

His Body Begins Its Journey Back to London.

May Find Sepulcher in Poets' Corner, Westminster.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 14.—Suggestions are heard in some quarters that the burial of Sir Henry Irving will take place in Westminster Abbey, in Poets' Corner, where lie the bodies of Garrick, Mrs. Siddons and other theatrical celebrities.

LONDON, Oct. 14.—The body of Sir Henry Irving will reach London at 3:30 o'clock tomorrow morning. It will be conveyed here on a funeral car attached to the regular train from Bradford, accompanied by his sons, Henry B. and Laurence, and Bram Stoker and other members of his business staff, and personal friends. Immediately on its arrival, the body will be taken to Sir Henry's residence. Notwithstanding the requests that no flowers be sent, several magnificent designs have already reached Bradford and have been given a place on the coffin.

Flags were placed at half mast on many of the theaters in London today and the afternoon and evening performances in the theaters throughout the country closed with the orchestras playing a dead march. At the Queen's Hall concert, Chopin's funeral march was played, the vast audience standing.

A meeting will be held in London at which a proposition for a national memorial will take shape. It is understood to be extremely probable that Sir Charles Wyndham will propose the endowment of a national theater in Irving's name.

Ellen Terry, who is playing at Birmingham, is reported to be completely prostrated and did not appear at tonight's performance.

SORROW UNIVERSAL.

Seldom has the death of a public man in England called out such a universal expression of sorrow as has followed the tragically sudden demise of Sir Henry. Appreciations, histories of his career and stories of his many-sided activities fill the newspapers.

His last words on the stage, as the curtain was run down on his death of Becket—"Into thy hands, O Lord; into thy hands!"—were the last uttered as he never spoke after his collapse in the hall of the hotel where he died.

Members of the company now recall that Sir Henry showed signs of exhaus[illegible] and overstrain during the past [illegible] but these did not attract par[illegible] attention at the time. [illegible] the performance of "The [illegible]" at Bradford Thursday the veteran actor delivered many passages [illegible], instead of his customary freedom of movement on the stage. Once [illegible] twice last night, toward the close of the performance, Sir Henry was seen to support himself on the stage, but in response to the recalls of the audience he appeared before the curtain and acknowledged the cordiality of his reception.

FLAGS AT HALF-MAST.

Flags are half-mast over the Town Hall and other public buildings at Bradford today and telegrams are pouring in from all parts of the country.

In view of the doctor's certificate, the Coroner has decided that an inquest is not necessary. No definite funeral arrangements have been made, but the family is understood to desire to have them as simple as possible.

Ellen Terry says: "I know all this has happened as he would wish. He worked to the very last, in full possession of his faculties. It rejoices me that he finished the evening's work. His last words on the stage were:

" 'Through night to light.

" 'Into Thy hands, Oh, into Thy hands.'

"His last expressed wish, the wish of his life, was for a municipal theater, where everything would be of the first order, where the standard of true drama, as distinguished from miscellaneous entertainment, would be successfully upheld. A realization of this wish would be a fitting monument to him."

PULITZER WEDS MISS WEBB.

Son of New York Editor and Relative of Vanderbilts Become Husband and Wife in Vermont.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SHELBURNE (Vt.) Oct. 14.—Fredeca Vanderbilt Webb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb of Shelburne and New York, and Ralph Pulitzer, son of Joseph Pulitzer, the owner of the New York World, were married in Trinity Episcopal Church at noon today. Rt. Rev. Arthur C. A. Hall, Episcopal bishop of Vermont, officiated, assisted by Rev. Dr. Ernest H. Stirrs, rector of St. Thomas Church, New York, and Rector William E. Weeks of Trinity Church, Shelburne.

The bride was attended by Miss Wenonah Wetmore of New York, and Miss Edith Pulitzer, sister of the groom, as maids of honor, while the best man was Joseph Pulitzer, Jr. For the ceremony, the church was decorated with autumn leaves and cut flowers. Vocal music by the male choir from St. Thomas Church, New York, was one of the pleasing features.

After the wedding a reception and breakfast was held at Dr. Webb's home, Shelburne Farm, about four hundred guests being present. Later Mr. and Mrs. Pulitzer went aboard Dr. Webb's yacht, Elfrida, for a cruise on Lake Champlain.

Among the guests were Senator Chauncey M. Depew, Lieut.-Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twomby, Mrs. W. D. Sloane and many members of the Vanderbilt family, of whom the bride is a relative.

RAILROAD RECORD.

BIG ROADS FIGHTING.

Northern Pacific and St. Paul Want Northwest.

Each Want Natchez Pass in Cascade Mountains.

The St. Paul Makes Another Significant Move.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA (Wash.) Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Northern Pacific and Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads are engaged in a contest for the possession of the entrance to Natchez Pass, one of the two remaining available passes through the Cascade Mountains. Under the name of the North Coast Railway, the St. Paul road is securing rights of way and starting construction work in Yakima Valley. Opposing it is the North Yakima and Valley Railroad, the Northern Pacific enterprise having for its apparent object the occupancy of Natchez Pass to prevent other roads from using it.

Yesterday the North Coast Railway started to build a railroad around a bluff in a strategic location eleven miles from Yakima. At this point there is only room for one road. The North Coast Company had secured title to the land facing the bluff. The competing road claims to have a similar title and is endeavoring to obtain possession of the disputed ground while workmen of the North Coast Company are away. Graders are at work on both roads and they will parallel each other up Natchez Valley. The St. Paul road will also build up Teiton River to Cowlitz Pass, connecting on the west side with the Tacoma Eastern Railroad, which is owned by William Rockefeller, who controls the St. Paul Railroad.

The Tacoma Eastern is now built to the entrance of Cowlitz Pass on the west side. Representatives of the St. Paul road yesterday incorporated the Pacific Railroad Company, with a capital of $3,000,000, to build from Tacoma and Seattle to Walla Walla county, a distance of 250 miles.

FIRST CONNECTION MADE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The first actual connection between Chicago railroad and the Chicago Subway was made yesterday, when the shafts from the bore to the tracks of the Chicago and Alton road at Van Buren street were opened. Two or three carloads of coal were dropped down and sent to a downtown business house. Five shafts connect the railroad with the subway and will be used for coal traffic.

Connection with the warehouse by elevators will be made later.

PURCHASED BY SYNDICATE.

SAN JOSE RAILWAY SOLD.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN JOSE, Oct. 14.—Hugh Center, manager of the San José, Santa Clara and Alum Rock Electric Railway, this morning officially announced that the sale of that road, so long pending, has finally been consummated, the purchasers being the syndicate represented by Hanchett. Who the actual purchasers are, he is not prepared to say. The new owners will take possession November 1.

This morning Surveyor A. B. Southard of San Francisco and a force of men begun the work of surveying for a standard track from Santa Clara to Alum Rock Park, and the entire line will be rebuilt and modernized, with up-to-date cars and equipment throughout.

The transfer of this road follows the recent deal by which the Parkinson-Santa Clara interurban properties were taken over by the same parties, who are represented by Hanchett. The original project was the building of a line from Santa Clara to San Mateo, with several branch lines, and the indications are that it will be carried out.

HERBERT "GETS HIS."

WOULDN'T AGREE TO POLICY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A. D. Parker has been appointed vice-president and general manager of the colorado and Southern road, succeeding J. M. Herbert. Mr. Parker has been auditor of the road several years. He has extensive interests at Goldfield and Tonopah.

The trouble that led to the withdrawal of Mr. Herbert dates back many months, but did not come to a crisis until two weeks ago. Herbert and Trumbull could not agree as to the policy of the road, and many heated interviews have taken place. Parker and Trumbull are said to have been after Mr. Herbert's scalp for some months.

GOULD OWNS ROAD.

CONTROLS IRON COMPANY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George J. Gould dominates the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. At the annual meeting Monday, would will have more than two-thirds of the total vote of the company. There is a report that John D. Rockefeller will be found to have lost one or more directors, but this is denied. Whatever interest Rockefeller has in the big company will be subservient to the will of Gould, and Gould will have the absolute naming of the board of directors and the officers.

The proxy committee is composed or George Gould, D. C. Beaman, secretary of the company, and President Hearne. Mr. Gould will not attend the meeting and Judge Beaman and Mr. Hearne will do all the voting. It is understood that Gould will spend $500,000 enlarging the Pueblo plant and operate it at capacity. It will make all his Western Pacific rails.

GRAND DUKE CYRIL DEGRADED.

Czar's Sporty Relative Incurs Displeasure of Nicholas by Marrying Divorced Duchess.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 14.—The Grand Duke Cyril arrived at Peterhof this afternoon, having been summoned from Germany to receive the full weight of the imperial displeasure on account of his marriage to the divorced Grand Duchess Victoria of Hesse, which occurred recently at Munich, Bavaria. He will be deprived of his rank as aide de camp to the Emperor, of his commission in the army, of his uniform and his orders and other honors and will be excluded from Russia.

An autopsy performed today on the body of Prince Troubetskoy, on account of rumors of foul play, disclosed the fact that the Prince's death, which occurred here October 12, was due to the rupture of a blood vessel in the brain.

POPS FORM TRUST.

Former People's Party Men Discard Theories of Justice to Go Into Business.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SIOUX CITY (Iowa) Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Trust busters" organizing a trust is a sarcastic comment of the Kittredge Republicans of South Dakota upon the organization of a $1,000,000 company to combine and control all independent telephone lines in that State.

Andrew Lee, former Populist Governor, is a director, with R. F. Pettigrew, former United States Senator and a bolting Republican, C. I. Crawford, former Attorney-General, leader of the "Boxers," and tentative candidate for Congress or the Governorship, and George W. Burnside, former Mayor of Sioux Falls, and an anti-Kittredge Republican.

STERN PARDONED AT LAST.

American Who Hurt Pride of Petty German Official is Forgiven, but Pays Fine.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERLIN, Oct. 14.—The Augsberger Abend Zeitung states that Louis Stern of the New York Chamber of Commerce, who was sentenced ten years ago, for insulting Baron Thuengen, Vice-Commissioner of Bad Kissengen, to a fine of 600 marks ($150) and two weeks' imprisonment, has now been pardoned. The bail which he deposited at that time, amounting to $16,000, has naturally been confiscated.

The case caused no little sensation at the time, the dispute arising through Baron Thuengen forbidding Stern's son to dance in the Kurhaus dancing saloon, where only persons above fifteen years of age are allowed to dance. At the time, no stone was left unturned to bring about a change of the sentence from imprisonment to a fine only, the American Ambassador intervening, but in vain. With bail and other costs, the whole affair has left Stern a poorer man by $25,000.

ASSAULTED BY GANG.

A. J. Reashaw of No. 2000 Bonita street suffered severe cuts to the right side of his face early this morning as the result of an attack made upon him by a gang of Mexicans. Reashaw is said to have attempted to board a work train, and was stoned by his assailants. He was taken to the Receiving Hospital.

CHANCE HONORED.

There was a great demonstration for Captain Frank Chance when the Chicago Nationals defeated the White Stockings on the West Side grounds in the fourth game for the baseball championship of Chicago. The most intense rivalry has been exhibited by adherents of the two teams as well as by the players themselves. The Nationals started the game with a handicap of five runs scored against them in the first inning, but by a great rally in which Chance's stick work was a feature they outgamed the Sox and won 8 to 5. Then the delirious fans swarmed on the field and, boosting the California boy upon their shoulders, carried him in triumph to the clubhouse. The Nationals need only one more game.

TRAIN RAN AWAY.

With the engineer, Bruce Ide, unconscious at the throttle with a gaping wound in the head from a projecting bridge timber, the Panhandle flyer carrying 250 passengers dashed through the streets of Schereville, a suburb, at full speed tonight, and struck and killed Henry Schulte, a wealthy resident.

When the fireman heard Schulte's scream he clambered into the cab, found the body of the wounded engineer and made frantic endeavors to stop the train. He did not get it under control until Crown Point, eleven miles away, was reached.

PROOF OF CONSPIRACY.

The Federal authorities expect to present documents at the trial of the beef packers cases which will begin about November 1, furnishing in themselves, it is declared, strong proof of the alleged combination in restraint of trade.

These documents consist, it is said, of contracts and signed agreements showing that the former officials of the concerns consolidated into the National Packing Company, were compelled to pledge themselves not to enter again into the packing business without permission.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Goldie Yell, the alleged Minnesota kidnaper, was released today when it was admitted that the two-year-old boy taken from the Regan home in Alton is the young woman's own child. FIRE WIPES OUT ENTIRE COUNTY FAIR.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BUCYRUS (O.) Oct. 14.—While the races at the County Fair this afternoon were on, the grand stand was discovered to be on fire. A panic followed the first announcement. Spectators in the grand stand rushed for the exit, which soon blocked the only passage to safety. Excited women, children and men leaped over the front of the stand upon the track, twelve feet, and many were injured by the leap.

Those who left the grand stand last were badly burned, as the big pine building went like tinder. Within three minutes after the fire was discovered the stand was wrapped in flames.

The fire was caught by a stiff breeze and was driven across the grounds, communicating from building to building. The horticultural hall went like powder. The photographic art building and newspaper headquarters were destroyed. School exhibit hall was badly damaged, and some of those inside were burned.

The canvas used by the farm implement people was swept away and a mass of flame from the building played upon an acre of implements, buggies and windmills, destroying them. Women in charge of exhibits in the halls had only time to seize their personal belongings and escape.

In less than half an hour the entire fair was wiped out.

BAD AUTO WRECK.

Six People Injured When a Speeding Machine Jumps a Fence—Driver is Arrested.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Miss Vie Brunmer and Miss Bessie Boyd, who are believed to be residents of Syracuse, were injured severely this morning and they have little chance of recovery, when an automobile in which they were riding plunged through an iron fence and into the tunnel in Park avenue and Thirty-third street.

Charles Gelhaus, owner and driver of the automobile, was also severely injured. He was cared for and then placed under arrest.

The others injured are Mrs. E. Wilde of No. 215 West Thirty-fourth street, and Mr. and Mrs. Spiltdorf, patrons of the Criterion Hotel.

Mr. Gelhaus, who lives in the Bronx, had invited the party to go with him in his heavy 40-horse-power gasoline automobile to the Vanderbilt cup races.

The big machine started down Broadway at a rapid pace and wheeled into Thirty-third street, running at a terrific speed eastward. Suddenly the machine swerved to one side of the street, smashed through the iron fence that runs along the edge of the street and landed on the car tracks ten feet below.

Police who witnessed the accident found the two women under the machine and the others lying near in a partly unconscious condition. The machine was badly wrecked.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Continuous conferences held in this city during the past week by the largest and most active wholesale grocery interests of the country have resulted, says the Journal of Commerce, in the perfection of plans for the early organization of a National Wholesale Grocers' Association, which will be entirely representative of the trade.

F. H. Madden, who came here as the authorized representative of the Chicago Merchants' Exchange, has promised the coöperation of the jobbers of that city. Among the participants in the conference was William Judson, chairman of the National Executive Committee—a body representative of many State and city associations.

The jobbers purpose to ally themselves more closely with the retailers in future and through them gain the confidence of the consumers, that adulterated, impure or not up-to-the-standard products cannot be successfully marketed in any part of the country.

GRAFTERS SENTENCED.

Williamson and His "Push" to the Jail are Sent.

Oregon is Further Purged of Public Land Thieves.

Severe Northern Storm Has Ships at Its Mercy.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 14.—John Newton Williamson, Congressman from Oregon for the Second District, was sentenced in the United States Court today to serve ten months' imprisonment and pay a fine of $500. He was lectured by the court for failure to set a good example to others because of his exalted public position.

Marion R. Biggs, ex-United States Commissioner, was taxed by the court with a similar dereliction of duty, and given an equal penalty, but in the case of Dr. Van Gesner, convicted of being a fellow-conspirator, to suborn perjury, on account of age and feeble health, the term of imprisonment was cut in two and the fine doubled. Appeals are pending, and a stay of execution was made, pending a further order of the court. Meanwhile, Congressman Williamson will go free on his own recognizance, but a bond of $[illegible], was required of the other two defendants, as during the trial of the case. As the terms of imprisonment is less than one year, the sentences must be served in the County Jail.

When the time arrived for the judge to impose sentence, Judge Hunt asked Williamson to stand up. With his hands in his pockets and with no change in color, looking the judge squarely in the face, Williamson stood ready to receive sentence.

Judge Bennett, his counsel, interposed an objection, on the ground that his client is a member of Congress, and imposing sentence would interfere with his attendance and conflict with his constitutional rights. This was overruled.

"Mr. Williamson," said Judge Hunt, "an indictment was brought by the grand jury, charging you with conspiracy to suborn perjury. Your plea of not guilty was entered and upon trial you were found guilty. The time has now arrived to impose penalty. Have you anything to say before sentence is passed upon you?"

There was no plea for mercy from Williamson. He answered in a firm voice, grimly, without shifting his position; "I guess it has all been said, Judge."

JOHN NEWTON WILLIAMSON, Congressman from Oregon, sentenced to ten months imprisonment for complicity in land frauds.

The request of Naval Constructor Evans that specimens of the rust that came from boiler B, about half a pint, be procured from Washington, was agreed to by the court. COLLINS ABANDONS FIGHT.

SHERIFF HAS BILL DUE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

VICTORIA (B. C.) Oct. 14.—G. D. Collins, wanted at San Francisco for perjury formally abandoned his fight against extradition today before Justice Duff, who granted the application to abandon habeas corpus proceedings. Collins then reverted from the custody of Sheriff Richards, to which he had been ordered by Chief Justice Hunter, to that of the Chief of Police, who will allow him at large as before with a special guard, pending the arrival of the warrant of surrender from Ottawa, about a week hence, when Collins will be turned over to Detective Gibson of San Francisco, who holds President Roosevelt's warrant for Collins.

The abandonment of Collins's fight has left Sheriff Richards without payment for guarding him since the habeas corpus proceedings began. The Sheriff sought to collect $12 a day from Frank Higgins, counsel for California. He referred the Sheriff to Collins, who, the counsel said, had agreed to pay the expenses of such custody in lieu of being confined in the common jail. When the Sheriff asked Collins for payment the prisoner said he was without funds. Sheriff Richards then instructed counsel to apply to Judge Duff for an order placing the responsibility for payment for the custody, but the judge declined to express an opinion.

A week out at sea they were engaged and marriage followed at Yokohama.

The bride had to retnurn here on another steamer, as the company's rules forbid an employé to have a wife on his steamer.

MARTINEZ, Oct. 14.—An official announcement was made today that the sugar refinery at Crockett will be opened and placed in active operation on the 1st of March, 1906. The mill will employ upward of three hundred operatives. The Crockett refinery is the property of the Californian and Hawaiian Sugar Refining Company, which is controlled by a number of Hawaiian sugar men.

TOGO'S EXAMPLE STIMULUS.

Fact That Admiral Worships at Ise Temple Creates Profound Impression in Tokio.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

TOKIO, Oct. 14.—11 a. m.—The news that Vice-Admiral Togo worshiped at Ise Temple is creating a profound impression. It is believed that his act will furnish a lasting example in national religious education and that ancestral worship will be given fresh stimulus, especially in the army and navy. Admiral Togo has shown his implicit faith in what he said in his report of the great naval battle when he attributed the Japanese victory to the protection of the spirits of imperial ancestors.

It is believed that the government has sent an order to Manchurian headquarters to commence the evacuation of Japanese troops October 16. It is expected that Japan will effect a complete withdrawal of her troops in six months.

The Navy Department has announced the seizure of the American steamer Centennial, October 10, in Soya Strait.

WAS FROM SAN FRANCISCO.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The Centennial is an iron schooner-rigged steamer of 2075 tons. She is owned by the Charles Nelson Company of San Francisco. She sailed from San Francisco September 13 for Vladivostok.

PORTLAND FAIR ENDS, A GREAT SUCCESS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 14.—Today, "Officers and Stockholders' Day" at the Lewis and Clark Exposition, is the last of the exposition period. After tomorrow, the work of wrecking the immense exhibit palaces and State buildings will commence. In a few months all that will remain of the exposition will be a memory of its success as expositions go, for President Goode has made public announcement that stockholders will receive a dividend of from 30 to 40 per cent. on their stock, a record said to be unequaled by any exposition of like character ever held in the world.

The closing of the exposition will not be marked by any elaborate literary exercises, but toward midnight there will be a grand fireworks display. Bands will render patriotic airs and at the time of "Auld Lang Syne" by the United States Artillery Band, President Goode will formally declare the exposition closed.

The exposition has been a remarkable success from every standpoint. It has attracted to this city and to the great northwest a hundred thousand people; the exposition has attracted investors in almost every line of endeavor and it has made known to the entire country some of the advantages which the Pacific Coast has to offer homeseekers.

It is probable that with today's attendance the fair will have attracted over 2,500,000 people.

It is possible that the fire which destroyed the Missouri building last night was of incendiary origin. F. E. Beach, a prominent business man of this city, claims to have seen the fire spring up from a pile of rubbish back of the burned building. This would indicate that the fire did not start from defective electric wiring, as was at first thought. A young man named McDonald says he saw three men trying to scale a fence near the building immediately before the fire broke out.

EMPERORS SIGN TREATY.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The Emperor of Russia and the Emperor of Japan today signed their respective copies of the peace treaty, thus officially ending the war.

PARIS OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 14.—The following official statement was issued this evening: "His Majesty, the Emperor of Russia, today signed the treaty of peace between Russia and Japan. He has charged the Ambassador of Russia in Paris to communicate this fact to the knowledge of the French government and to request it to inform the Japanese government."

SIGNED AT PETERHOFF.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 14.—The treaty of peace was signed today, though the representatives of the Foreign Office refuse to make any official statement on the subject. The treaty, engrossed on parchment, with the French and English text in parallel columns, was sent by Foreign Minister Lamsdorff to Peterhoff, where the ceremony of signing took place.

EFFECTIVE NEXT WEEK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

TOKIO, Oct. 14.—5:30 p. m.—It is confidently expected that the treaty of peace with Russia will become effective Monday or Tuesday next, when the notices of its ratification will have been exchanged.

TOGO WORSHIPS IN ISE TEMPLE.

GREAT ADMIRAL SOON GOES TO TOKIO FOR HONORS.

Prospect of Visit from Bryan Fills Japanese Editors With Pleasure. Admiral Noel Joined by Lady Noel and Daughters—Prince Arisugara's Garden Party Great Success.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

TOKIO, Oct. 14. 3 p.m.—Vice-Admiral Togo landed at Ise Bay today and proceeded direct to the great Ise Temple, where he worshiped. He will stay at Ise Bay until joined by his other warships, when he will proceed to Tokio for the naval review.

The local papers express great pleasure at the prospect of a visit from W. J. Bryan, and devote much space to the history of his political career.

Vice-Admiral Sir Gerald Henry Noel has been joined in this city by Lady Noel and his daughters, who were met at the railway station upon their arrival by a number of Japanese naval officers. They drove to the British legation in an imperial carriage.

The garden party given by the Prince and Princess Arisugara in the grounds at Shiba Palace, yesterday, was a great success.

SHE ENTERED VLADIVOSTOK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Oct. 14.—The steamer Tellus was fined $400 yesterday by the customs officers for leaving Nanaimo for Ladysmith without entering or clearing. Capt. Arntzen, of the Tellus, will apply to the Dominion authorities to have the fine remitted, on the contention that his vessel was only in the harbor a few hours.

The Tellus was engaged in blockade running during the war, being one of the vessels which made a successful trip. She managed to enter Vladivostok and carried contraband through the Japanese blockading lines in the Sea of Japan.

FINAL PAYMENT SMALL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The final subscriptions to the latest Japanese loan of $50,000,000 financed in this country some three months ago is payable next Monday. It amounts roughly to about $40,000,000 but inasmuch as a great number of subscribers availed themselves of the privilege of paying in full on the first call, the final payment will hardly exceed $17,000,000.

ARMENIANS PRESENT FLAG.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—An American flag presented by Armenian orphans to the United States government was received here today at the appraiser's office. An inscription on the flag stated that it was given in gratitude by the Armenian orphans of Harpoot, Syria. Many Armenian orphan children assisted in the weaving of this flag, whose threads are so tightly interwoven that the banner weighs twenty-five pounds, although its size is only seven feet eight inches by three feet eleven inches. It is too heavy to fly in a breeze, but makes a rich silk drapery. The flag will be forwarded to the State Department at Washington.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful It Is In Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

WASHINGTON.

BACK FROM INSPECTION.

Naval Constructor Returns from the Coast.

He Has Looked Over Stations and the Ship Yards.

[illegible] Light on the Proposed [illegible] Cuban Treaty.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Chief Constructor Capps, United States navy, returned today after his inspection trip to the Pacific Coast, upon which he left Washington September 4. He visited San Diego, San Francisco, Mare Island, Puget Sound naval stations and Seattle, inspecting government plans and private shipbuilding yards. His report will be made public later.

The board which has been engaged for some months in an effort to revise the so-called Endicott plan of coast defense is still hard at work on the problem. There is an impression among some members that it will be impossible to set aside some of the original estimates for fortification, at least so far as it relates to guns proper.

There is comparatively no chance that there will be any material revision of the total sum, however since it is quite evident to experts that what is saved in one direction will be required in another, in at least equal measure. For instance, it now appears that it will be necessary to have considerable provision made for submarine defense and that this feature must be developed beyond anything realized by the authors of the Endicott plan.

A large part of the latter estimate will probably go for the purchase of submarine boats and other material required in under-water protection and attack.

The Secretary of War expressed the hope that the original estimate of $150,000,000 may be reduced to $120,000,000, but those who are familiar with the needs of the service and the cost of material insist that there cannot be any material saving.

IMPROVEMENTS OF WATERWAYS.

NO ESTIMATES THIS SESSION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Acting on the belief that there will be no river and harbor act passed during the approaching session of Congress, Gen. McKenzie, chief army engineer, will not submit estimates for new appropriations for improvement of the country's waterways. Of course, the General will recommend that money be provided for performing work being done under the continuing-contract system. This will amount to a million dollars or more but it will be carried in the Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill. Meanwhile, reports of surveys of various projects, with a view to starting new improvements, will be sent for reference by the River and Harbor Committee when the next River and Harvor Bill is being prepared.

MONEY THROWN AWAY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—In the opinion of army engineers, $200,000 of the government's money has been thrown away on a useless survey of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal to ascertain if a 14-foot channel can be made from Chicago to St. Louis. The survey, which has been made by two commissions, has just been completed, and the reports have been received by Brigadier-General McKenzie, chief of engineers, who will transmit them to Congress. The reports, while admitting that a 14-foot channel is perfectly feasible, say that the cost would be from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. The engineers deem this amount too great, and will, it is believed, report adversely to the project, in view of the great cost.

FIGHT AGAINST RUEF.

a voice that could be heard a mile on a clear day. Him Abraham picked out to make a labor union Mayor.

ABE INSIDE THE WORKS.

The first thing done when Schmitz was elected was significant. Abraham's law clerk became the Mayor's private secretary so Smitty couldn't do anything that Abey didn't know.

Political men in San Francisco say it is a common thing for committees who want the Mayor for a dedication or a corner-stone laying to make application to Ruef rather than Schmitz.

"All right," says Abe. "What time do you want him there?"

And he's there.

Schmitz, himself, is probably the weakest man that ever held such a job.

He's as big physically as the side of a house, a fierce, handsome, blackish man. There's something oriental about him. He looks like the Turk in a melodrama.

The only time he got out of Abey's jurisdiction was during the Native Sons' parade in Sacramento when a non-union band nearly broke up the show and all the union bands quit the parade.

Schmitz was a pitiable spectacle on that occasion—afraid to speak either way, cowering and fuming and apologizing.

During his reign, San Francisco has been a hotbed of corruption, brazen graft and lawlessness.

Innocent people have been assaulted on the street for patronizing boycotted goods, while the police looked on and laughed.

Instance after instance is told where firms have been forced to employ Abe Ruef as attorney to escape police persecution.

An article to follow this will tell of some of the raw hold-up games of the administration, of some of the terrible dens of vice and shame that make San Francisco "a city of Dreadrful Night"—all flourishing under the most obvious police protection.

PARTRIDGE'S MAKE-UP.

The head of the ticket of the two combined parties is John S. Partridge. He is a young man not over 35, apparently. His present position is deputy city attorney.

Purposely, he was dug out of semi-obscurity. It was felt that to nominate one of San Francisco's rich and influential men would only be adding fuel to Abe Ruef's flames.

Partridge was raised in the California hills in the northern part of the State—a calm, earnest, country-bred boy. He is good to look at and he feels honest when he shakes hands.

There is nothing of the happy gladhander in his make-up. He is deliberate and calm and gravely courteous with the dispassionate exactness of a good lawyer.

When Ruef's men started an absurd gas-rate scandal about him, his reply was not the hot retort, giving the lie with raging and bad language. He simply announced the truth with about as much passion as a jury returning a verdict of not guilty. He had examined the point judicially and overruled it.

GEORGE'S POSITION.

The actor who occupies the queerest position is Herbert George, the manager of the San Francisco Citizens' Alliance, whose single brave efforts drove the boycotting banners and union "pickets" from the streets of San Francisco and who is forcing the domineering unions and tyrant walking delegates to fight for their lives and very existence.

Naturally, he is hated as the devil hates holy water. At the Schmitz meetings they sing insulting campaign songs about him and call him every vile name that tongue can lick around.

As usual the San Francisco Examiner has succeeded in outdoing all others in nastiness and vileness.

In Colorado, where he lives, Mr. George owns a weekly newspaper known as "George's Weekly." On account of a dwindling circulation, the editor got Mr. George to become ostensible author of a column of gossip and comment signed with his own name. As a matter of fact, he wrote not a very large share of his own column. Unhappily the editor clipped from a little country paper a rather silly story about a flirtation with a girl on an Oakland ferry-boat—it was written in the first person.

It was stuff like this:

"I said to her, 'Honey, will you go to dinner, etc.'"

He put that in Mr. George's column.

Any newspaper man would recognize the facts at a glance. The Examiner, however, clipped and republished it as being George's own flirtation.

So San Francisco rings with songs about "the bald-headed masher."

Mr. George is really a man of the greatest charm; his family relations are ideal and this is breaking his wife's heart.

Under the circumstances, however, it makes the not-too-courageous Fusion party very uneasy to see George wearing a Partridge button—they fight as shy of him as though he were the genius of smallpox instead of the man who is saving San Francisco from commercial destruction.

The last actors play a satirical and melancholy part—these are the newspapers.

After all their miserable kow-towing, rolling in the dirt for the unions to walk on; concealing the union's crimes, swallowing the union's insolent orders with a brave and smiling face, this is their final reward—to be called "a boughten, hireling press," and cursed from hell to breakfast.

THE POST'S FLOP.

Even the Examiner does not escape, but is "cursed" with the rest.

Ruef ought to be well posted, for he has bought the San Francisco Post—no pun intended; don't shoot.

For a time, Mr. Garret's "noble" sheet was subsidized by the Citizens' Alliance as Mr. George states frankly. Finding its circulation nothing much and its influence vastly less, the Citizens' Alliance dropped it—to be picked up by Ruef. Its unclean columns are now filled with frightful tirades against the fusion candidates and upholding Ruef's various grafts.

An examination of its empty advertising columns tell a deadly tale to newspaper men.

The Chronicle and Bulletin, while not criticising the unions, wade into the administration, pitilessly exposing its graft and corruption.

Each side of the fight gives liberal promises of easy victory. There is probably one and but one man, who could tell you with a degree of certainty, what the outcome will be—Abe Ruef.

There are rumors of desertions from the union ranks. The new voting machines don't "look good" to Abraham, in spite of the fact that he has his men on the election boards.

They say that Ruef has told the union men that the election boards can tell by the difference in sounds of the registering bell which ticket is being voted, so they need not try to turn traitor to his glorious union administration when they get behind the curtain. . .

THE RED BUTTON.

But Abey evidently lacks a sense of humor. The buttons he has sown broadcast for Schmitz are the fiery red of anarchy.

Men of many unions, under Abe's pressure, have been ordered to wear them on all occasions. So you see thousands.

Yet Abe is wise enough to know that it is one thing to make a man wear a button and another to make him vote as you tell him.

It is not very flattering to San Francisco business men, but many who will vote for Partridge are afraid to wear his button. Shame on them!

Scores of San Francisco houses are submitting to Ruef's demand for campaign funds, but are secretly contributing to the Partridge fund.

Some of the men secretly most bitter against Ruef—nobody thinks of Schmitz either one way or tother—are his "followers," the saloonkeepers. They have been held up and bled and bled and held up until they are tired.

In fact out of this "peoples administration" the only people who have benefited are Ruef and his friends—also a moderately good fiddler got a change of vacation to corner-stone layer and messenger boy.

Of all the "people," they who came out worst were the unions.

One thing about Gas fur Fuel: there is no needless waste. A twist of the wrist and the fire is out. A match, and it is started.

MINISTER POWELL RESIGNS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The resignation of William F. Powell as United States Minister to Hayti has been submitted to the President and accepted. As his successor, the President has determined upon Dr. H. W. Furniss of Indianapolis, a prominent negro. Dr. Furniss is the present consul to Bahia, Brazil. He will assume his duties as Minister to Hayti about November 15.

Information from Cuba that there is a growing dissatisfaction there at the terms of the proposed Anglo-Cuban treaty has developed here the fact that the Washington government thoroughly appreciates the reasons of the Cuban people for objecting to the treaty. The official view here is that the treaty is distinctly advantageous to Cuba in that it precludes that country from renewing with the United States her reciprocity treaty, which, under the present arrangement, is effective only for five years. The Anglo-Cuban treaty, it is pointed out, gives practically no benefits to Cuba and shuts her off from receiving advantageous treatment at the hands of the United States.

SPANIARDS CAUSE PANIC.

SEVILLE (Spain) Oct. 14.—Over a thousand farm laborers, made desperate by the famine, invaded Market Place, at Ecija, forty-eight miles from Seville, today, seized the entire stock of goods and money, destroyed the market and threw the town into a panic. The authorities hastily applied for military relief.

KING OSCAR RESUMES REINS.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 14.—King Oscar formally resumed the reins of government today. The King of Sweden, August 10 last, appointed Crown Prince Gustave Regent while His Majesty went to Marstrand for his health. The Crown Prince has, for similar reasons, previously acted as Regent several times.

Stephen M. White Memorial Design is Selected.

By the action yesterday of the Stephen M. White Memorial Association, which made final awards for the design of the memorial that is to be placed in the Courthouse grounds, the early award of the contract and the quick completion of the memorial are assured.

Award of the first premium for design, $200, was made to Douglas Tilden, a San Francisco sculptor; second premium, $150, to J. F. Brines, sculptor, and C. R. Caldwell, architect, of New York, and the third premium of $[illegible] went to Edgar Walter, sculptor, also of San Francisco, who now is engaged in study in Paris. Mr. Tilden, who secured first premium, was assisted in the execution of the design by Ernest Coxhead, architect.

Although the designs have been accepted and the premium awarded, this award does not carry with it the contract for the erection of the monument. That is a matter which will rest entirely with the committee having the matter in charge.

It is of interest to note that the sculptor successful in gaining the first premium is a native son of California as was the distinguished lawyer and statesman whose memory is to be perpetuated in the raising of the shaft in this city. Douglas Tilden is well known for his skill as a sculptor and was born in this State, his grandparents having been among the earliest white settlers of Santa Cruz, where the late Senator White passed a part of his life. The Tildens established their home in the northern country in 1846.

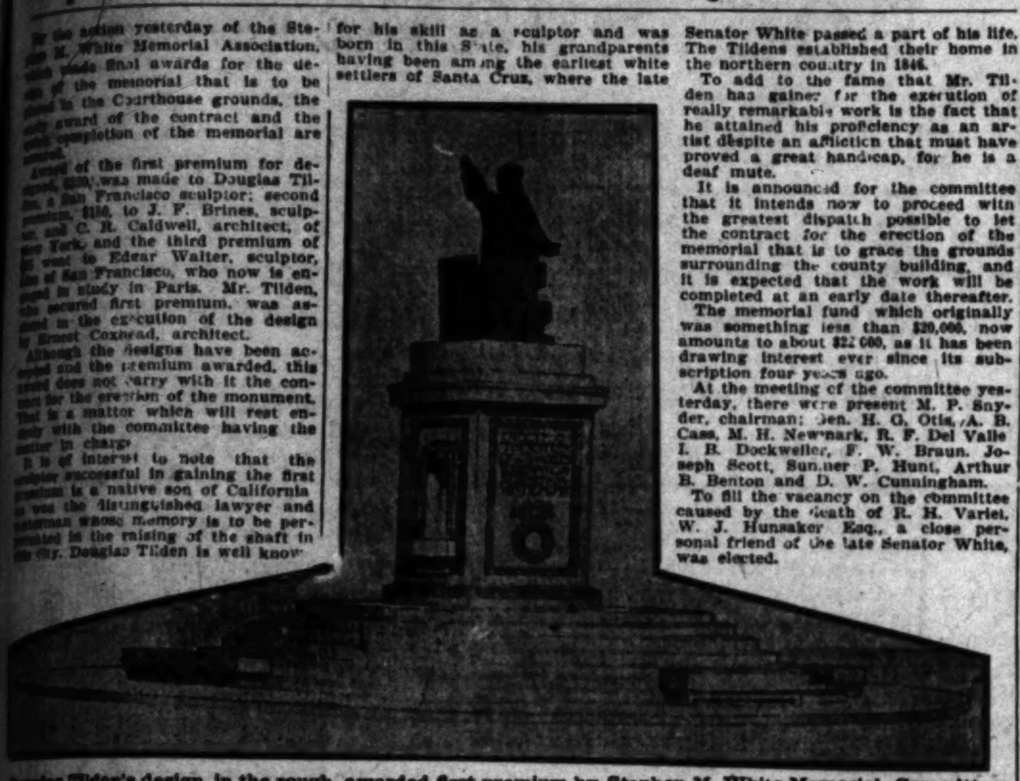
To add to the fame that Mr. Tilden has gained for the execution of really remarkable work is the fact that he attained his proficiency as an artist despite an affliction that must have proved a great handicap, for he is a deaf mute.

It is announced for the committee that it intends now to proceed with the greatest dispatch possible to let the contract for the erection of the memorial that is to grace the grounds surrounding the county building, and it is expected that the work will be completed at an early date thereafter.

The memorial fund which originally was something less than $20,000, now amounts to about $22,000, as it has been drawing interest ever since its subscription four years ago.

At the meeting of the committee yesterday, there were present M. P. Snyder, chairman; Gen. H. G. Otis, A. B. Cass, M. H. Newmark, R. F. Del Valle, I. B. Dockweiler, F. W. Braun, Joseph Scott, Sumner P. Hunt, Arthur B. Benton and D. W. Cunningham.

To fill the vacancy on the committee caused by the death of R. H. Variel, W. J. Hunsaker Esq., a close personal friend of the late Senator White, was elected.



Douglas Tilden's design, in the rough, awarded first premium by Stephen M. White Memorial Committee.

ACCEPTANCE LIKELY OF CITY HALL SITE.

COUNCILMAN THEODORE SUMMERLAND has stated to prominent business men within the past two days that he will vote for the city's acceptance of the free site for a City Hall on North Main street. This will doubtless assure the prompt acceptance of the proffered gift at tomorrow's session of the City Council.

Councilman Hiller has publicly stated that he will be guided by the wishes of his constituency in casting his vote. Yesterday petitions were circulated in his ward for the signatures of property owners, asking that the city accept the site offered, and out of all the men approached only three refused to sign. From Hiller's own ward, the Third, tomorrow will come up petitions signed by more than 300 property owners and well-known business men, asking that the site be accepted. Mr. Hiller can do no less, in the light of the statements he has made, than to accede to the expressed wishes of his constituents, and cast his vote for the city's acceptance of the magnificent gift offered.

Those who have been active in pushing the proposition are highly gratified at the manner in which business men and men of affairs generally have come to its support. Even those who at first were inclined to look with little favor on the proposition have, in many cases, expressed themselves as convinced of the wisdom of the city accepting a good thing when it has the opportunity.

MAFIA IN CHICAGO A MYTH.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Reports that relatives of Gaetano Costa, the Brooklyn merchant, said to have been a victim of the Mafia, had suffered a similar fate in Chicago, were denied yesterday by the police. In the numerous Italian murder cases about Chicago, robbery was found in almost every case to be the motive. In only a few cases have the murderers escaped arrest. The machinations of the Mafia are declared myths by Chicago detectives.

LOS ANGELES MEN GET RANCHO VERDE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An immense land deal is announced tonight, which includes the sale of the Rancho Verde, on the Mojave River, embracing 4000 acres, taking in Victor Narrows. The purchasers are persons who, through A. E. Poole of Los Angeles, have been buying up ranches along the Mojave River during the past year. The consideration named for the Rancho Verde and the water rights is in the neighborhood of $250,000.

It is the reported intention of the purchasers to construct a wall at Victor Narrows 160 feet in height, which will impound a lake nine miles long, making the largest artificial lake in California.

The plans of the company, which is headed by J. H. Braly, president of the Southern California Savings Bank of Los Angeles, and other Los Angeles capitalists, call for the expenditure of from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 in completing the project they have on foot.

Though no definite statement is made as to where the water is to be used, it is credibly stated that the syndicate intends to tunnel the mountains and bring water to this side, which will necessitate a fourteen-mile tunnel. It is also suggested that the project may be a rival to the Owens River deal. Engineers state that the Victor Narrows and water supply is the finest reservoir site in the State.

The Rancho Verde is a noted stock ranch near Victor, and formerly was owned by E. C. Sterling of Redlands and Reginald Frost of Victor, who bought it for $150,000 three years ago.

ROOT AND TAFT SEE PRESIDENT.

FORTHCOMING VISIT TO ISTHMUS ONE TOPIC DISCUSSED.

Secretary of War's Trip to Panama Involves Many Important Questions Which Must be Definitely Decided Upon and Conference Was Arranged to This End.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Secretaries Root and Taft were in conference with the President at the White House today. A part of the time was devoted by the President and Secretary Root to discussing some changes in the diplomatic and consular service.

These matters out of the way, the three officials talked over the forthcoming trip of the President through the South and of Mr. Taft to Panama, with particular reference to the things made necessary to be done by Secretary Root in their absence.

It was said tonight thta the visit of Secretary Taft to Panama involves many questions which it is important definitely to decide upon, and that the conference was arranged for this purpose, but no intimation was given as to any of the details of the discussion.

If the wishes of the people of Panama are to be acquiesced in Secretary Taft will time his intended visit to the isthmus to be there November 4, the date of the anniversary of the separation of Panama from Colombia. This date is to be celebrated as a national holiday, and a special and urgent invitation has been extended to the Secretary and Mrs. Taft to participate in the celebration.

Col. Edwards, chief officer of the Panama Canal Commission, will go to the isthmus with Secretary Taft. Arrangements are being made to sail from New Orleans on a naval vessel on the 27th or 28th of this month. This arrangement will depend on the quarantine conditions at that time.

PANAMA WON'T PAY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PANAMA, Oct. 14.—The government denies the report that it will pay $1,000,000 to Colombia's foreign bondholders. The Associated Press is officially informed that Panama will only pay its share of the debt in proportion to the population of the isthmus at the time the independence of Panama was declared and conditionally on Colombia's agreement to pay the sums borrowed from the former State of Panama treasury.

SIDE TALKS BY THE OFFICE BOY

This city has grown and grown, as if by magic. In every part of town, good buildings are being torn down and replaced by better ones, the merry ring of the hammer and trowel wakes the tardy sleeper in all parts of the downtown section, one car crowds close upon another's heels through all of our business streets, the constant toot of the automobile horn warns the hurrying predestrian that he has no business on the other side of the street. We'll have to have an elevated road in a year or two. The Santa Monica line should have one now, or else the private individual will have to give up all hope of Fourth st. Substantial business houses are reaching out and going blocks ahead of the procession, but the gap will be closed before you realize it. When we opened our store at 6th and Broadway, people said we were demented, but our judgment wasn't so faulty; we've been forced to take the two stores back of us, our trade is increasing so rapidly. I wouldn't be surprised to see the old man open a store at 10th st. The town will be there in a couple of years. I believe prosperity follows the Silverwood stores. FACES A MOB, HAS HIS MAN.

Officer Has a Hard Time Making Arrest.

Fifty Hooting Men Rush in to Aid Prisoner.

Fight in the Street Brings on Small Riot.

While he was rendered defenseless by the loss of his revolver and handcuffs, a determined mob of fifty men came near seriously injuring R. T. Arrington, a special policeman, at Fifth street and Central avenue at 9:30 last night. The officer also was determined.

Arrington is a negro and a slender man of five feet. He was attempting to arrest Peter Peterson, an ice man, who was fighting in the street.

At the first move of the officer toward Peterson the latter's friends gathered from every direction, and surrounding Arrington gave Peterson an opportunity to board a passing car. On the car Peterson is alleged to have assaulted the motorman, and the car was stopped with the officer in close pursuit.

With the assistance of three other men Peterson was dragged from the car and placed under arrest. In the mix-up Arrington lost his revolver and handcuffs and was surrounded by a hooting mob, who threatened him with violence, and heaped epithets upon him. Arrington succeeded in recovering his manacles and clasped them on the prisoner's wrists, holding the crowd in abeyance with drawn revolver. The arrival of additional officers is all that saved Arrington from injury.

CRIME CAMPAIGN BRUSH'S PLAN.

ELLIS THROWS LIGHT ON HIS TRAVELING COMPANION.

Crook Also Told Horseman That He Quarreled With His Wife in Colorado Springs, Which Further Shows Him Murderer of the Bouton Woman, Last Year.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BERKELEY, Oct. 14.—William Ellis, who is recovering from the wounds inflicted by the man known as Brush, Curtis and Andrews, today told a story of his escape from death. It differs in a few details from the statements he had previously made.

He stated today, in opposition to a former assertion, that Brush, or Andrews, never directly admitted killing a woman in Colorado. He now qualifies his assertion made yesterday by saying that Brush once told him of having quarreled with his wife at Colorado Springs and of receiving a pistol shot from the woman, who subsequently died of pneumonia.

The further statement was made by Ellis that he never suspected Brush of any crooked work until they arrived in Berkeley. He declares that Brush always treated him with kindliness up to the time of the attack.

An important point was made known by Ellis—that, last Monday night, he stayed at the house which Brush and the woman had rented in Berkeley and that while he was there Brush broached to him a campaign of crime in cities about the bay. "Brush said it would be easy to make a good living by robbing the houses of wealthy people in Berkeley and surrounding cities," said Ellis. "He declared it would be much easier to make money this way than by following out our plans to engage in horse racing. I was afraid to denounce Brush, who held a great influence over me. I did not upbraid him for his nefarious plans, but merely said I was content to make my living by racing horses."

According to the story told by Ellis today, Brush said to him he was anxious to return to Colorado Springs, where he had considerable money deposited in a bank. Another reason for wishing to go there was that he had a wife buried there.

SOUGHT RAILWAY MAN'S SON.

PINKERTON REVEALS PLOT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—William A. Pinkerton declared today that Pat Crowe, the alleged kidnaper of Edward Cudahy, Jr., was suspected of complicity in a well organized plot to kidnap and hold for ransom of $50,000 the child of a prominent New York railroad magnate. The name of the magnate was refused by Mr. Pinkerton but he considered the plot of sufficient importance to notify the railroad man.

The Cudahy kidnaping at Omaha occurred several weeks after the New York plot was discovered and as the plan followed there was along exactly similar lines, Crowe's name was never entirely removed from the investigation.

According to Pinkerton, investigation tended to show that Crowe had intended also to assassinate General Counsel O. M. Spencer of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad at St. Joseph, Mo., and then kidnap a member of Judge Spencer's family.

MEN MAY ESCAPE GALLOWS.

TAKE ADVANTAGE OF NEW LAW.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Taking advantage of an amendment to the Penal Code, adopted at the last session of the Legislature, attorneys representing Chilion Bowen, held for the murder of William A. Stephenson, a Nevada stockman, and John A. Logan Bell, who shot and killed his stepfather, made a preliminary move before District Judge Lawlor today to prevent the trial of their clients.

It is alleged that in neither case was the new law providing that a judge who holds a man charged with crime must sign the original complaint as a "presiding magistrate" complied with. The judges are said to have followed the custom of affixing their signatures simply as "judges," to a fly-leaf covering all the papers in the case. This action, it is asserted, makes the commitments void.

Judge Lawlor took the novel point under advisement.

MRS. MASON ACQUITTED.

HUSBAND YET TO BE TRIED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

STOCKTON, Oct. 1.—After a trial begun last Tuesday at San Andreas, Mrs. M. A. Mason, who, with her husband, was charged with the murder of Jose Nandino near Valley Springs, Calaveras county, in October of 1903, was acquitted yesterday.

It was alleged that she fired the shot which killed Nandino, her husband being present and assisting in the efforts to dispose of the body by burning the house. They were arrested in Stockton some months ago on information given the officers by their daughter, who said she had been threatened with death if she told. The husband is yet to be tried. Both are well along in years.

BULLFROG HAS FIRST MURDER.

KENTUCKY MAN IS PERFORATED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BULLFROG (Nev.) Oct. 14.—In a street duel this afternoon, A. J. Jodoin, a Frenchman, shot and almost instantly killed "Bob" Arnold, a prospector, originally of Madisonville, Ky., but recently of Salt Lake and Denver.

The trouble arose over a trifling remark made by Jodoin last night, at which Arnold took offense. The latter drew a pistol and struck Jodoin a severe blow on the head, making an ugly cut. Today, as Jodoin was leaving a saloon, Arnold began shooting. Jodoin turned, drew a revolver and took deliberate aim. His pistol missed fire four times but the fifth attempt was successful and Arnold fell, shot through the addomen. He died thirty minutes later.

This is the first murder in Bullfrog.

LIVELY FRACAS IN CAFE.

Party of Denver Men Thrown Out of Place After Tilt With Local Crowd in Broadway Resort.

The wildest confusion existed among patrons of the Imperial Café for several minutes late last night, when a party of men from Denver, occupying a table in the center of the place, became involved in a controversy with a party of Los Angeles men seated at an adjoining table. Heated words were exchanged, and the shouts of the men and women who joined in the wordy battle completely drowned the orchestra which kept diligently at work in an attempt to preserve order. The Coloradans were thrown into the street, through the Broadway exit. No arrests were made.

CRIME BRIEFS.

Charred Corpses Found in Ruins.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The charred corpses of Joseph Kantrum, 27 years old, and his three-months-old child, were found in a closet beneath a stairway in the three-story tenement at 672 Jefferson street, today, after firemen had extinguished a fire which is thought to have been of incendiary origin. During the fire, several occupants leaped from windows. It is believed that the supposed incendiary was Kantrum and that his object was suicide. He had quarreled with his wife.

MAY CONSTRUCT JOINT LINE.

ESPEE AND SANTA FE TO DEVELOP LUMBER COUNTRY.

Basis of Compromise is Connecting Link Between San Francisco Northwestern and California Northwestern, Important Lines in Northern California.

It is believed from recent developments in Humboldt county that the aggressive competition between the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fé for supremacy in the great redwood forests of that part of the State will be called off with the agreement to build and operate jointly a line from Scotia, the southern terminus of the Santa Fé's line, the San Francisco and Northwestern, and Willits, the present northern terminus of the Southern Pacific's California Northwestern.

At present the Santa Fé is in a peculiar position in the Humboldt bay country. It owns a line which has no other railroad connection, and whose only outlet is by way of the coasting Pacific vessels.

Not many months ago when the Santa Fé was planning to complete a line from Humboldt into San Francisco territory it had under advisement the purchase of the California Northwestern running from Sausalito to Ukiah, but while the proposition was in the hands of the Board of Directors, E. H. Harriman got wind of the proceedings and bought the California Northwestern before breakfast one morning.

Following this the Santa Fé put surveyors in the field and announced an intention of building its own line all the way through to San Francisco to connect with its main line. This would give it a rail outlet for the great lumber business of the Humboldt regions to the markets of the east.

Simultaneously the Southern Pacific began building northward, with the expressed determination of invading the Santa Fé territory about Humboldt. This work was pushed as far as Willits, and there halted indefinitely. It is now announced from semi-official quarters that the two systems have reached an understanding, and will jointly finish the connecting link between the two lines which will give the Santa Fé an outlet to the lumber markets of the inland states, and the Southern Pacific an entrance into the lumber regions.

At the present time all of the lumber taken out of this district is shipped up and down the coast by sailing vessels and steamers, a great deal of it finding its way to Los Angeles through the ports of Los Angeles, San Pedro and Redondo.

WHITE RESIGNS.

J. W. White, who has been with the Santa Fé for years, has resigned his present position of general auditor of disbursements with headquarters at Topeka, to return to his old home in this city to engage in business for himself.

The resignation of Mr. White came as a surprise both to the company and to his friends, but he maintained that Los Angeles was a good enough place for him to live in even at the cost of a fine position. He first entered the service of the Santa Fé more than twenty-one years ago. In 1900 he was appointed to the position of auditor of the Coast lines, with headquarters in this city, and in 1903 was made general auditor of disbursements with headquarters at Topeka.

W. G. Barnwell, general freight agent of the Santa Fé, will return Monday from a trip to San Diego.

PYTHIAN BANQUET.

Honors for Judge D. K. Trask, the Past Grand Chancellor of Grand Domain of California.

Samson Lodge No. 148, Knights of Pythias, has arranged for a banquet to be given at the Angelus Hotel on Thursday evening, the 26th inst., in honor of Judge D. K. Trask, who is Past Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias in the Grand Domain of California, and a member of the lodge giving the banquet.

Elaborate plans have been made for the affair, and among the after-dinner speakers will be George Knight of San Francisco, Tom Fitch and Rev. Robert J. Burdette, three speakers of wide reputation as brilliant orators. U. S. Senator Frank P. Flint will respond to the toast, "Our Country," and Gen. H. Schaffner of San Francisco will speak. Among the local speakers will be Frank Dominguez, who will respond to the toast, "The Grand Domain of California;" Byron L. Oliver, "Civic Liberty," and Frank James, whose theme will be "Our Guest."

FOR THE MAN WHO WORKS AT A DESK

Not Doctors, But the Right Kind of Food is What He Needs if He Would Keep His Health

You work at a desk and you are shut up in an office all day long, your brain overworked, your body absolutely idle. You get "out of sorts" and your meals don't please you and what you eat doesn't agree with you.

We want to give you some inside information.

Maybe you think you are sick, but you aren't. You need one of two things—exercise or better food.

It may be impossible for you to get the exercise. It's the easiest thing in the world to get the right kind of food. Just ask your grocer for Malta-Vita, the famous, whole wheat food. Then eat it at least once a day—for breakfast—with cream or fruit. It will strengthen and refresh your body and mind and fit you for the day's work, and you will be glad we told you about it.

Every nutritive element of the best white wheat grown is found in Malta-Vita. This famous food is the whole of the wheat thoroughly steamed and cooked in absolute purity and mixed with the finest malt extract that was ever made, the finest, richest, strongest food in the world. You understand, of course, that the cooking and steaming of the wheat gelatinizes its starch, and then the malt extract, a powerful digestive agent, quickly converts this starch into maltose,—malt sugar. Maltose is great food, and the weakest stomach digests and assimilates it without effort. Physicians recommend it and Malta-Vita is rich in it.

The malted wheat having been rolled into little flakes is baked under such intense heat that when it comes from the great ovens, every flake is crisp, brown Malta-Vita—the most delicious food in the world. Always ready to eat.

A perfect breakfast is impossible without Malta-Vita and it's good three times a day. All grocers sell it.

ANGELENO SAT UPON THRONE.

Local Man Made Oriental Principality.

Self-Shorn of Laurel, He Returns to America.

E. W. Tarleton, a Los Angeles man who has for three years been an Oriental nabob, the observed of all observers in his own principality, returned to this city yesterday, minus all the gauds of office, and divested of everything save the dignity which comes from being an absolute sovereign.

Mr. Tarleton's stay in the city was brief, as he went East again last night. He will proceed to New York, there to settle up the business of his employers before returning to Southern California to make his home. He expects to be back some time in the early part of January, 1906.

Tarleton went away as agent of the Commercial Guarantee Company, a middle-sized New York concern, which had interests in wood plantations along the Indian Coast. While in the East he was made the sole representative and highest authority of those people, and as their principal holding was a small island in the Indian Ocean, Tarleton became its Governor and supreme ruler. He had under him about three hundred native subjects, with a sprinkling of Chinese and Japanese.

He had over all of them almost absolute power of life and death, as they owed allegiance to no Indian government, and had practically never heard of the existence of Great Britain. He developed his wee empire to the best of its resources, established a system of municipal government for the toy town his workmen set up, put in a small system of sewers and waterworks, created a department of justice, and for [illegible] crimes had a rigorous system of confinements and other punishments. Fortunately, for his own peace of mind, he was not called upon

ANGELENO SAT UPON THRONE.

Local Man Made Oriental Principality.

Self-Shorn of Laurel, He Returns to America.

R. W. Tarleton, a Los Angeles man who has for three years been an Oriental potentate, the observed of all observers in his own principality, returned to this city yesterday, minus all the gauds of office, and divested of everything save the dignity which comes from being an absolute sovereign.

Mr. Tarleton's stay in the city was brief, as he went East again last night. He will proceed to New York, there to wind up the business of his employers before returning to Southern California to make his home. He expects to be back some time in the early part of January, 1906.

Tarleton went away as agent of the Commercial Guarantee Company, a well-known New York concern, which had interests in wood plantations along the Indian Coast. While in the East he was made the sole representative and highest authority of those people, and as their principal holding was a small island in the Indian Ocean, Tarleton became its Governor and supreme ruler. He had under him about three hundred native subjects, with a sprinkling of Chinese and Japanese.

He had over all of them almost absolute power of life and death, as they owed allegiance to no Indian government, and had practically never heard of the existence of Great Britain. He modeled his wee empire to the best of his resources, established a system of municipal government for the toy town [illegible] set up, put in a small system of sewers and waterworks, created a department of justice, and for [illegible] had a rigorous system of [illegible] and other punishments. Fortunately, for his own peace of mind, he was not called upon to deal with any very serious offenses.

He ate dinner at the Hollenbeck last night, and before starting East he related some of his adventures in the lobby.

Said he: "The power of Great Britain in India is felt in such a general way in many places, without localization, that the native subjects scarcely know who their rulers are. In India, as in other Oriental countries, the Occidental can easily establish himself in absolute authority just so long as he does not interfere with the religious customs of the people whom he governs. My petty subjects were all Buddhists, with the exception of half a dozen Christians, and a few followers of Confucius—the latter all Chinese. I encouraged the Buddhists, protected the Christians and threw a safeguard about the rites of the Chinamen, and accordingly all swore by me.

"The Oriental community, whether it be large or small, needs organization and direction. That is all, for Indian workmen are good workmen, and I have no reason to suppose that workers in other parts of Asia are less efficient. Ages of Buddhism, however, have bound them down in a sort of political Nirvana where every man does for himself in his own crude way, and no man thinks it worth while to do anything for the community. Perhaps the British subjugation has had something to do with this, but at any rate, it is a condition that is very manifest.

"It will be bad policy to shut any 'open door' in Asia to the trade or industries of America. They need us just as badly as we need them, and far more, and they are ready to give us their money for our ideas."

Mr. Tarleton has left his nephew in charge of his island dominion for two years, at the end of which time he intends to return.

BIRDSHOT IN LEG.

Young Man Peppered by Accidental Discharge of Gun in Hands of Hunting Companion.

Word was received from Wheeler Springs last night of the accidental shooting of William Buffum, who resides at the home of his parents, No. 144 West Twelfth street, this city.

With his mother Mr. Buffum has been passing several weeks at the springs. Yesterday he went on a short hunting trip in the mountains, accompanied by a friend. The accidental discharge of the gun carried by his companion, whose name is unknown, sent a charge of fine shot into Buffum's left leg, being scattered between the knee and thigh.

While the wound is painful, no serious results are anticipated. The police last night notified Buffum's father of the accident, and he left on an early train this morning for his son's bedside.

YOUTH OF SIXTEEN A DIAMOND ROBBER.

Wesley Bruin, a 16-year-old lad, was brought to the County Jail last night from East San Gabriel, where he took the leading role in a diamond robbery, which was cleverly done.

Prompt action on the part of C. C. Davis, the owner of a large walnut ranch, is all that prevented young Bruin from making his get-away with a diamond ring valued at $500, and a gold watch and chain worth a good deal.

Little or nothing is known of the Bruin boy. A few days ago he was sent to the Davis ranch in East San Gabriel by a local employment agency and placed at work harvesting the walnut crop. Yesterday afternoon, while picking walnuts with a number of other employés, Young Bruin made an excuse to leave his work and go to the Davis house, some distance away, and which he knew was unoccupied at the time.

The lad's continued absence awakened the suspicion of his employer and Davis hastened to his home, and finding the lad had departed made a hasty examination of the rooms, discovering the absence of the ring and watch.

His suspicion was directed towards the boy, and securing a rig Davis started in pursuit, taking the road leading to Los Angeles. In this presumption he was correct. After riding a few miles he overtook the boy, who was walking rapidly towards the city.

Davis accused the lad of having stolen the property, and with apparent unconcern he admitted his guilt, producing the valuable gem and watch, which he returned into Davis's possession.

The lad apparently did not realize the enormity of the offense which he had committed and nonchalantly awaited a deputy from the Sheriff's office, who arrived at the ranch a few hours later in response to a telephone message.

Young Bruin was registered at the County Jail and then taken to the juvenile home. He refuses to state whether or not he has a home in Los Angeles, and questioning elicits nothing concerning his relatives.

NOTED FIRE-FIGHTER.

Ex-Chief Hale of Kansas City, Who Won Award for Merit, in Los Angeles.

George C. Hale, ex-fire chief of Kansas City, and probably the most widely known fire-fighter in the world, is in Los Angeles with his wife and Judge F. W. Gifford and wife, of Kansas City.

They will leave tomorrow for Salt Lake, on their homeward trip, after having made a tour of the northwest, including Butte, Mont., Spokane, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco.

For the past four days they have been putting in full time enjoying the attractions of Los Angeles and vicinity, and Chief Hale has fallen in love with this city.

"When I get back to Kansas City I shall join the throng in praising Los Angeles," said the fire-fighter, last night. "It is wonderful, simply wonderful, the development on every side. Your city is favored above any that I know, and I have been in all the principal cities of Europe and America. There's nothing like it, and it is remarkable what an interest is manifested in Los Angeles in every part of the country."

Mr. Hale has been in the hands of Chief Lips, Thomas Strohm and Walter Moore since coming to Los Angeles, and he is particularly pleased with the showing made by the city's fire department. He declares it compares favorably with that of any city of its size in America.

For thirty-seven years Mr. Hale was a member of the Kansas City fire department, and for twenty-two years its chief. In 1883 he took his fire-fighting crew to London to the International Tournament, and won the world awards for merits.

He was placed in charge of the fire protection department at the St. Louis Exposition, and as president of the National Firemen's Association was a manager of the firemen's tournament at that place.

Returning to Kansas City he established a plant for the manufacture of fire-fighting apparatus, and various fire houses in Los Angeles are equipped with his inventions. It was Hale who, years ago, invented the swinging harness, now almost universally adopted in fire departments; and his also is the invention of the water tower.

LATE SPORTS.

BERKELEY WINS FROM STANFORD.

FUMBLED PUNT PROVES COSTLY FOR CARDINALS.

Stanford Makes Many Bad Mistakes in Handling the Ball, While Berkeley Was Superior in This Style of Play—Stanton of Los Angeles Was Bright Star of the Day.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A two-sling punt by the California quarterback; a fumble in the Stanford back field; an eager California player ready to pounce upon the bounding leather, and to carry it across the line for a touchdown, and California won today in the freshman game.

That is the story of the annual struggle held this afternoon in the Berkeley stadium between the baby teams of the two universities. The only touchdown of the game came with only seven minutes left to play in the second half. Schaefer of California sent a punt zig-zagging down the field; Holman of Stanford reached for it, touched it and then allowed it to go past him toward the goal; Stanton of California scurried through a wriggling mass of players, seized the coveted oval and carried it between the posts for a touchdown, Cerf kicking a goal a few moments later.

That straw-haired lad, Stanton of Los Angeles, was the bright individual star of the day. He was everywhere at the right time. At running in punts he was a marvel of speed and elusiveness, while his work on the defense was of the sort to make the Berkeley coaches open wide their eyes and make mental notes for future use. As a matter of fact, the California backs proved to be backs of exceptional ability. It is to them that the credit of the victory must go, for the line was outclassed by the sturdy forwards of the Cardinal. To the backs and to a little of that something called luck and to Stanford's poor handling of punts, the blue and gold owes its glory of winning.

To Stanford's poor handling of punts—that's really the whole thing in a nutshell. Taking all of the punts in the aggregate—and there were enough of them for half a dozen games—Stanford gained from 10 to 15 yards per punt. This would ultimately have meant victory for them, and it doubtless would have but for one thing. That one thing was that the Stanford back field fumbled the punts in a miserable style, and, where they might have been gainers in the end by constant exchanges, they were most decidedly losers. In fact, it was the exception for a Cardinal player to handle a punt neatly.

The line-up was as follows:

University.		Berkeley.
Doane	center	Hotchkiss
Wildman	right guard	Tucker
Garford	right tackle	Cuhna

PORTLAND BEATEN.

MISERABLE FIELDING GAME.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Oct. 14.—Oakland had easy sailing in today's game, for Essick's support was the worst exhibition of fielding ever seen on the Portland grounds. Ball after ball was hit through the infield that should have resulted in the retirement of the batsmen, but sluggish fielding allowed them to go as hits. Essick fanned twelve men and with McLean practically played the whole game. Score:

Oakland, 11; hits, 17; errors, 1.
Portland, 5; hits, 8; errors, 6.
Batteries: Schmidt, Graham and Hackett; Essick and McLean.
Umpire—Rankin.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Orange and Santa Ana High School football teams met on the gridiron here this afternoon for the first game of the season. The visiting team was an easy mark for the locals, the score being 34 to 0. The locals played strong and in perfect harmony. Capt. Lemuel Robinson, left halfback, made several brilliant plays, the feature being a 40-yard run.

LIFE IN PRISON FOR MURDERER.

SLAYER OF ROMO SENTENCED AT SAN BERNARDINO.

Fred Eldridge Takes His Portion Coolly and Talks About Weather. Espee Tracks on Desert Blocked for Several Hours by Freight Wreck. Narrow Escape for Crew.

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 14.—Fred Eldridge, who yesterday pleaded guilty to murder, was this morning sentenced by Judge B. F. Bledsoe to life imprisonment at Folsom. He heard the words which confine him to a felon's cell the remainder of his days with the same cold demeanor that has marked him as one of the most nervy prisoners who ever faced a local tribunal.

For two hours preceding the passing of sentence the accused was interrogated by the court, describing in detail the killing of Ernest Romo as he would have the public believe it, and denying that he had not robbed the dead man.

"We were quarreling over the amount Romo thought I should pay for the use of a horse. We were both just drunk enough to be ugly, and as Romo started toward me, I grabbed his revolver, which lay on a table. He started to run and I shot him," was the way Eldridge put it.

WRECK TIES UP ROAD.

The breaking of a wheel flange on a freight car caused a bad wreck on the Southern Pacific near Oraz, a small desert station a few miles west of Yuma, yesterday, demolishing fourteen loaded cars, and so tying up the main line that the fast westbound Rock Island was stalled for the day. The wreck occurred in a narrow cut, making it unusually difficult to clear. So far as reported, no one was seriously injured, though the train crew and several tramps had narrow escapes.

SAN BERNARDINO BRIEFS.

Morris Katz, head of the Katz estate, announces that the estate is considering plans for a modern structure to replace the one-story ramshackle building which now occupies the northeast corner of Third and E streets, the best business corner in this city.

Felix Villa, a laborer employed at the Decies quarries, was badly injured this morning by the explosion of a blast long after the fuse had been lighted. It was supposed the fuse had died and Villa was sent to withdraw the charge. While thus engaged the explosion occurred, hurling Villa a considerable distance, and so mangling him that his right hand had to be amputated. He was taken to the County Hospital.

The funeral of Miss Hannah Renison, sister of the Episcopal minister, who died Thursday night, will take place Sunday from St. John's Episcopal Church. The remains will be shipped to San Miguel.

Henry Hoskins, who says he is 21 years old, but appears young, pleaded guilty to the burglary of a rooming-house at Barstow last week. Judge Bledsoe postponed sentence.

Mrs. Allen Hays was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce this morning after three years of matrimonial experience only the first four months of which were passed with her husband.

REDLANDS.

GREATER BEAR DAM.

REDLANDS, Oct. 14.—The Bear Valley Mutual Water Company is fast assuming shape, various companies coming in with stock and taking an equal amount in the mutual concern. As soon as the total amount of stock is in hand bonds will be floated and work on the greater Bear Valley dam and the Fillerae Flats reservoir will begin. The Crafton Water Company has just signed a release, and in doing so the greatest obstacle is out of the way. The next largest is the Redlands Water Company, which will take action on the proposition at a meeting to be held October 30.

BIG GRAIN CROP.

Wheat and barley threshing is about complete in this section. The crop was large, hundreds of thousands of sacks of grain being threshed in the last few weeks. In the Yucaipe valley there has been one of the best seasons known in several years, considerably over 100,000 sacks, while in the Moreno, Perris and Allessandro valleys the output has greatly exceeded those figures. The total estimate runs into almost half a million sacks. Some of the barley has run 120 pounds to the sack. Estimated returns to ranchers are more than $1,000,000.

REDLANDS-CORONA.

By a score of 21 to 0, the Redlands High School football players took the game from the Corona team this afternoon. Throughout the entire playing the visiting team, although much heavier, was outclassed in playing.

COLTON.

BOOST FOR RIVERSIDE.

COLTON, Oct. 14.—Resolutions indorsing Riverside's claim to the government experiment station was passed by unanimous vote last evening by the directors of the Colton Fruit Exchange and by the Chamber of Commerce. Gov. Pardee and party, who are viewing proposed sites for the station, passed through Colton this afternoon.

CORONA.

STILL AFTER FRANCHISE.

CORONA, Oct. 14.—John Morton of Los Angeles last evening made a second application to the City Trustees for a fifty-year franchise for an electric light, heat and power system, with concessions to the city, the board tabling the application. If the franchise be granted, Morton agrees to pay all expense and to furnish the city with electric service equal to 200 kilowatt-hours for each month. Any excess of this amount for such service would be furnished at 7½ cents per kilowatt-hour. Morton further agrees during the life of the franchise to furnish free renewals of all incandescent lamps and to furnish electric power for municipal purposes at 2½ cents per kilowatt-hour. These concessions, reduced to money value as compared with prevailing prices, would save the city $36 a month on the first 200 kilowatt-hours and $21 per month on the second 200 kilowatt-hours.

CORONA CULLINGS.

Property owners on Kellogg avenue and the lower 1000 feet on Garretson avenue have petitioned the City Trustees for grading, curbing, guttering and oiling with cement walk of 1000 feet of Garretson avenue, the city agreeing to build the two bridges required.

The Thermal school has reopened for the year with an enrollment of twenty-three pupils. Miss Mable M. Strable is the teacher.

Miss Ida Iverson is engaged as teacher of the Mecca school, which opened the 3d inst.

Glenn Bros. shipped the first cantaloupes of the fall crop from Thermal early last week. They were sent to Clifton, Ariz.

It is reported that next season's crop of melons at Brawley will be handled by Lyon Bros. & Coggins.

The 4½-inch well recently put down by C. B. Estle for J. P. Read at Mecca is 469 feet deep and is flowing six inches over the casing. Mr. Read will place the ranch under cultivation at once.

The freight road between the Dale mines and Mecca was recently inspected by Civil Engineer Lyons of the Southern Pacific for the purpose of estimating the cost of putting it in condition for freighting to the various mines of the district.

A produce company has been organized at Indio to market fruit, vegetables and other products and to do a commission business. It has a capital stock of $20,000.

The county well between Indio and the mines north of there is now seventeen feet deep and has one foot of water. This is for the benefit of prospectors and will be sunk four feet deeper before completed.

BABE DROWNS IN WASHBOILER.

TRAGIC DEATH OF LITTLE GIRL AT SANTA BARBARA.

Left Alone for Short Time by Her Mother, She Drops Plaything in Water and Topples in After It. Forest Fires Now Reported Entirely Out and Blaze-fighters Called Off.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Wilma Ellen Barber, the seventeen-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. William Barber of this city, fell into a boiler full of cold water yesterday morning and drowned. The little baby girl, just learning to walk, toddled into her father's room yesterday morning for a nap with him, after which she went out to where Mrs. Barber was washing clothes. The mother had just set a boiler full of water on the floor, when she was called across the street to answer the telephone. She left the baby playing with a buttonhook, and called to some of the other children to look after the child. They were playing outside and failed to follow their mother's bidding.

While playing over the boiler the little one dropped the buttonhook in the water, and in an effort to get it out she fell in and was drowned.

In ten minutes the mother returned and was the first to discover the tragedy that had befallen the child.

The child's father is a Southern Pacific employé and works at night. The family lives at Garden and Montecito streets.

FLAMES ALL OUT.

The forest fires on top of the mountains are completely out. This is the information brought in yesterday by Forest Ranger S. A. Douglas, who has been fighting the flames.

Douglas has his headquarters at Ventura, and was called out when the forest fire approached the Fithian ranch on Sunday noon. He fought the flames in that vicinity along the eastern limit of the burned district until Tuesday afternoon, putting out many blazes. He then sent to Ventura for saddle horses and pack mules, but found that the livery stable in which they were kept in that city had been burned and was obliged to get the animals from Carpinteria.

Taking on supplies at Montecito with other rangers they went up over the mountains through Romero cañon on Tuesday afternoon, and came upon a large fire raging in the vicinity of Blue cañon on Wednesday morning. This fire burned fiercely for two days. Douglas and his men joined Carl Stoddard's forces and fought it with determination. The most effective work was done at night, when the wind movement was slow. The fire was confined by hard work to an area of 160 acres.

Only a few smoldering ashes now remain in this locality. Most of the men have been relieved from duty, but a few rangers are still in the burned district.

SANTA ANA.

TROLLEY RIGHT OF WAY.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 14.—The jury in the condemnation suit of the Los Angeles Interurban Railway Company against Dr. H. W. Head of Garden Grove created a sensation last night by awarding Dr. Head $2278 damages and costs of the suit for the electric line right of way over his property.

Dr. Head's land is in two pieces of twenty acres each. One of these is cut diagonally into two fields of eight and seven acres respectively, and the other is cut through one corner, necessitating the removal of the house and barn and the loss of trees and a well. The total amount of land for right of way is about three acres, taken out in a strip 100 feet wide, running diagonally through the place.

One year ago, it is reported, Dr. Head offered to compromise with the electric company for $2000; it offered $600. The money to pay for the right of way is furnished by the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce in accordance with its agreement to give the Huntington road a free way from this city to Los Angeles.

COUNTY SEAT NOTES.

A marriage license was granted here today to R. L. Shore, aged 24, and Elsie L. Dilley, aged 23, both residents of Santa Ana.

J. Robinson, an employé of the Edison Electric Company, while working on the vault of the new Farmers and Merchants Bank, this afternoon, came in contact with a live wire and sustained a severe shock.

The Tustin Hotel was the scene of a gathering of about 400 persons last night on the occasion of the concert given under the auspices of the Tustin Improvement Society.

Public school teachers were tendered an informal reception last night at the home of Mrs. H. B. Heninger on Chestnut avenue, by the local W. C. T. U.

John Hallicy, aged 87, died today at Talbert. Funeral services will be conducted at the Catholic Church here and interment will be in the Santa Ana Cemetery.

ANAHEIM.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

ANAHEIM, Oct. 14.—A reception was given last night at the Methodist Episcopal Church in honor of Rev. George Haffer, the new pastor.

The local cannery shipped two cars of canned goods to Los Angeles this week.

Theo. Rimpau of this place who sold 100 acres of the Rimpau tract, between Washington and Pico streets, Los Angeles, this week, for a reported price of $100,000, still retains a few hundred acres.

Mrs. G. M. Allinson is seriously ill at her home on West Center street.

SAN LUIS OBISPO.

LANDSLIDE FOR WHARVES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] By a vote of practically 5 to 1 San Luis Obispo county today voted to bond the county for $90,000 to build public wharves at Cambria, Cayucos and Avila. The campaign has been one of the most exciting in the history of the county. Assemblyman Warren M. John, representing the business men of the county, led in the fight for the wharves, speaking in all sections. He was vigorously combatted by representatives of various corporations. The wharves will be commenced within a year.

CAUGHT BETWEEN THEM.

Pedestrian, Dodging Motorcycle, Bicycles and One Car, Struck and Injured by Another Car.

Harry Jacoby, proprietor of a saloon at Court and Main streets, sustained severe injuries in a street-car accident at 5:30 last night, and narrowly escaped instant death.

Jacoby's attention was directed toward a rapidly approaching Pacific Electric car as he was walking diagonally across Main street at a rapid pace. At the same instant the warning from a swiftly-moving motorcycle came to his ears, and in jumping to avoid being struck by the south-bound car and the motorcycle he was struck by a north-bound car and sent spinning along the pavement.

While Jacoby missed colliding with the north-bound car, owing to the number of rapidly-approaching cars and bicycles, he could not avoid being struck by one of them. He was taken to his residence, suffering from concussion and internal injuries.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

For The Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

IT WILL PAY YOU TO READ THIS CAREFULLY.

Mr. Hall first wishes it distinctly understood that under no circumstances will he publish a misleading advertisement. Persons who offer free tests and other improper inducements to entice people to their parlors by so doing acknowledge their inability to assist you. Common sense tells us that the services of a reliable psychic are always in demand, and are, in consequence, valuable, the same as those of a good lawyer or physician. Persons who advertise a great deal for a very little or nothing in any line of business generally give their patrons the worst end of the bargain.

MR. HALL DOES NOT CLAIM TO BE A SEVENTH SON, A VEILED PROPHET, OR A WIZARD.

Neither does he find it necessary to change his name in each city he visits on account of past improper operations which cast reflection on his profession or name. He is ready now, as in the past, to prove to all just what he claims. HIS CHALLENGE has not been accepted by a single individual who advertises from $1000 to $25,000 for their equals, but is still open to all such, and he is ready at any time to meet such, either in private or public, and prove that he is their superior in every respect. Ladies can visit Mr. Hall without fear of being insulted, and gentlemen need have no fear of being imposed upon. All will find him a reliable clairvoyant, a gentleman as well, who has no "humbuggery" or "hoodoo" business connected with his profession. All he tells you is told in a plain, straightforward manner, so that you can have no doubt of understanding how and knowing just what is best to do.

HIS ADVICE ON ALL BUSINESS MATTERS is invaluable, wise and consistent. SPECULATORS especially should learn of Mr. Hall's wonderful forecasts that have in notable instances brought fortunes to his patrons.

He advises you with a certainty by a higher than human power as to the proper course to pursue in life. HE IS RECOMMENDED BY EVERY ONE OF HIS PATRONS, and acknowledged by the public wherever he has been to be the marvel of the twentieth century. Through his remarkable development of second sight, and through knowledge of the many occult sciences peculiar to the men of the Orient, he is enabled to penetrate the woof and web of human life. He gives dates, facts and figures, reliable and important information on all undertakings, warns you of coming dangers, averts troubles, sickness, etc., guides you aright in all affairs of life, marriage, divorce, love, law and speculation; tells if friends are true or false. The future plainly revealed, lovers united, troubles healed, names of friends and enemies, and does give names of future husband and wife, with day of marriage, and is positively the only clairvoyant who does this correctly. Reunites the separated husband or wife, and secures for you the hand and heart of the one you love in marriage; brings you success and good luck in all undertakings, gives lucky days, weeks and months, and years, tells all about your future family and domestic life; gives excellent and reliable advice on all things pertaining to married life. Special attention is given to the location and recovery of old estates, locating mines and buried treasures, hidden fortunes, papers, documents; lost or absent friends. In a word, whatever may be your troubles, suspicions, hopes, fears or desires, call on this gifted man and he will send you away happier, wiser, and bolder than ever before. All business strictly private and confidential and attended to in person.

[NEWS REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.]

POLITICAL GAME WARMING UP.

PASADENA MAY SEE LIVELY TILT OVER SENATORSHIP.

Elmer Moody's Friends Grooming Him for State Place Now Held by "Boohard" Hahn—Speculation as to Who is to Wear Justice Congdon's Shoes—Munger-Henderson.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 19 South Raymond Avenue, Oct. 15.—Crown City politicians are getting more than usually busy these days, and what with the forthcoming State Senatorial fight, the justiceship contest and the administration's reported change of heart on municipal water, things certainly appear to be brightening up a bit.

The latest bunch of gossip along the political rialto comes in the shape of an inside announcement to his friends that Elmer I. Moody, one of the youngest lawyer politicians in the town, is to be a candidate against "Boohard" Hahn for State Senator this fall. The incumbent has made many enemies who would vote for anybody to see Hahn ousted. While Moody is a lawyer of repute, stands well among business men generally, and is said to have the backing of the leaders among local Republican ranks.

There is a possibility that in the face of these facts Hahn may decide not to run again, and, in fact, in an interview yesterday he intimated as much, although he refused to come out openly and speak his mind. In case Hahn withdraws, it would leave a clear field for Moody or some other man.

It is [illegible] the [illegible] Union [illegible] declared yesterday that he will bring suit against the city for damages for his imprisonment. At the time of the arrest Chief Pinkham declared he thought the man responsible for the numerous complaints about night prowlings which came from that neighborhood, and he caused Roberts to spend the night in jail on suspicion. In the morning, finding that they could obtain no further information against Roberts and on the advice of Police Judge Wood, the police turned him loose.

LOST HIS ROLL.

Assaulted by two highwaymen and relieved of his money, about $11, was the experience of George W. Arthur while passing through Library Park Thursday night. Arthur is employed in Los Angeles and before starting for his home on Walnut street in this city he drew his pay. According to Arthur's version of the hold-up two men saw him receive the money and followed him here on the same car. He left the car on Union street and entered the park at the Holly street entrance. Beneath the shade of a tree near the northeast side two men sprang upon him and when he realized that they were after his money he fought them back but they were too much for him. The police claim to know nothing of the occurrence.

MUNGER-HENDERSON.

Miss Anne Munger, only daughter of Austin Munger of North Madison avenue, and LeRoy Henderson, youngest son of C. M. Henderson, were united in marriage yesterday evening by Rev. D. D. Meredith at the home of the bride's father.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of about seventy invited guests and the pretty bungalow home was beautified with flowers in honor of the event.

In the great living-room, where the guests assembled, quantities of white roses and smilax were used. In front of a curtain of smilax an altar was erected with tall vases of cosmos placed at either side. An aisle was formed by broad white satin ribbons, which extended to pedestals covered with green, and through this the wedding party passed. To the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March as rendered by Miss Anne Whitmore, the bridal party entered, C. Mortimer Henderson with the groom, leading. The matron of honor, Mrs. C. Mortimer Henderson, followed and the bride came last. Mrs. Henderson wore an exquisite gown of white chiffon over satin and carried white carnations. The bride's gown was also white chiffon, with a garniture of chantilly lace. She wore a veil edged with Honiton lace and fastened with a chaplet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was a shower of lilies of the valley and as an ornament she wore a handsome sunburst of pearls and diamonds, the gift of the groom.

After congratulations Mr. and Mrs. Henderson left for a brief wedding journey and will be at home to their friends after November 10, at No. 589 North Madison avenue. Mr. Henderson is in the employ of The First National Bank and a popular young business man. The bride is distinguished for unusual beauty and has been a social favorite among a large circle of young friends.

HAPPY AFFAIR BIG BENEFIT.

LADIES OF HOLLYWOOD REAP FOR THE CHURCH.

Thousand Visitors Turn Out for the "International Market" and Find a Brilliant Scene and Jolly Entertainment—"Sold Out" Signs Displayed Before Closing Time.

Successful to a degree that pleased everybody was the "International Market" held yesterday afternoon and evening, at Hollywood, for the benefit of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The pretty affair was under the auspices of St. Catherine's Guild, composed of the young women of the church, and the management provided entertainment and fun for more than a thousand visitors.

The church people of Hollywood turned out en masse in an effort to raise $2000. The success of the entertainment is shown by the fact that almost all the money necessary was secured.

Under the trees, on the beautiful grounds of C. J. George, at Ivar street and Ocean View avenue, twenty booths were built. Chinese lanterns, strung artistically among the branches of the trees, made a pleasing background for the score of brilliantly-lighted booths which formed the street of the market of nations.

Clowns and tambourine girls, shouting and laughing along the midway, kept the gay company in the best of humor. Purse strings flew open and all were anxious to buy.

Goods at several of the stalls sold so rapidly that the dors were closed ahead of schedule time, and the sign "sold out" displayed.

The gypsy camp captured the crowd, and all were anxious to pass within the tent and have their fortunes told. At the campfire outside pretty girls in picturesque costumes pointed the way to the camp proper, where a comely-faced matron presided as queen of the gypsies.

The minstrel troupe, strolling from booth to booth, claimed attention, and their coon songs were enjoyed.

There was a real lovers' lane, just dark enough to be romantic.

Most curious of all was the sideshow, where the skeleton, the fat boy, and the snake charmer, held the boards.

A booth that attracted much attention was the Welsh Market, presided over by Mrs. Perry Jones. Sweet, juicy apples were sold by quaint Welsh maidens, who gathered many nickels for the church.

Mrs. E. W. Elliott had charge of the Mexican market, and a wondrous array of gorgeous Navajo blankets was displayed, together with a fine assortment of Mexican drawnwork.

Curios and souvenirs of the Golden West were sold at the handsome California Market, in charge of Mrs. H. J. Whitley. Every section of the State was represented.

Seldom has so much time and effort been spent on an affair of the kind, and the success of the open-air fete is due, in large part, to the women of Hollywood, who have striven to provide a delightful and novel outdoor entertainment which has given a jolly good time, and has brought needed dollars into the coffers of the church.

TUSSLE WITH SHARK.

AVALON, Oct. 14.—G. F. Steele of Chicago, who, with his family, is spending a month here, had a strenuous day's fishing yesterday. With his boatman, Capt. Harry Doss, he went up to the west end and found the ocean teeming with all sorts of marine creatures. First he took a couple of yellowtail and then ran onto a school of albicore, of which he took eleven, or parts of them, for the sharks levied tribute and compelled him to "divvy" with them. Along with the albicore were a lot of tuna and he had a royal battle with two of them, but before he could get them into the boat a huge shark took them both. The monster was said to be more than fifteen feet long. Finally the shark was hooked, but it ran away with the tackle.

While the anglers were fighting the shark a huge whale came up within a hundred feet of them and blew the air full of spray.

OCEAN PARK.

CARNIVAL'S GOOD START.

OCEAN PARK, Oct. 14.—The Venice Winter Carnival Association, an organization formed during the past week, has already made a good showing. The committee sent out to solicit subscriptions for the advertising fund had secured $3850 up to Friday night, and while only a partial report of yesterday's work could be obtained, it brought the total up to something over $400. This is in addition to the original purse of $5000, so that between nine and ten thousand dollars is now available.

This sum and what may be subscribed in the future will be devoted exclusively to the exploitation of the carnival project, in the newspapers, by attractive posters, and by such other means as the committee may decide upon. The committee is composed of Harry B. Goodman, E. Peltret and C. H. Brown.

The association has elected Dr. J. A. Stanwood, president, and J. C. Conklin, secretary, other committees, aside from that of advertising, being: Finance—J. R. Speck, H. L. Miller, J. G. French, Ives E. Cobb, L. E. Hoffman, A. C. Walter, A. R. Walters, J. W. Lincoln, J. F. Tanney, W. P. Winston and T. A. Worthington; stationary: J. E. Bangs, A. C. Walter and L. E. Hofman.

The place of meeting yesterday was changed from the clubhouse to the Auditorium and a large attendance is expected next Tuesday evening, at which time the ladies as well as the men are requested to be present. The Venice band will give a short programme and the big pipe organ will also be heard.

"MILKMAIDS'" CONVENTION.

Preparations for the "Interstate Milkmaids' Convention" to be held in the Auditorium are progressing satisfactorily. The handbills announce it to be a comic drama in two acts, and the personnel of the cast, including as it does many of the leading names in local social and artistic circles, gives assurance of its success in both lines. There are to be thirty people on the stage and the whole affair will be under the personal direction of Miss Augusta E. Pfieffer, assisted by Mrs. R. D. Robinson and Mrs. Isabella Fredericks, the latter as well as Miss Pfieffer, being connected with the Ocean Park Conservatory of Music. GOING TO BED HUNGRY

It Is All Wrong and Man Is the Only Creature That Does It.

The complete emptiness of the stomach during sleep adds greatly to the amount of emaciation, sleeplessness and general weakness so often met with. There is a perpetual change of tissues in the body, sleeping or waking, and the supply of nourishment ought to be somewhat continuous and food taken just before retiring, adds more tissue than is destroyed, and increased weight and vigor is the result. Dr. W. T. Cathell says: "All animals except man eat before sleep and there is no reason in Nature why man should form the exception to the rule."

If people who are thin, nervous and sleepless would take a light lunch of bread and milk or oatmeal and cream and at the same time take a safe, harmless stomach remedy like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in order to aid the stomach in digesting it, the result will be a surprising increase in weight, strength and general vigor. The only drawback has been that thin, nervous, dyspeptic people cannot digest and assimilate wholesome food at night or any other time. For such it is absolutely necessary to use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they will digest the food, no matter how weak the stomach may be, nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time.

Dr. Stevenson says: "I depend almost entirely upon Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in treating indigestion, because it is not a quack nostrum, and I know just what they contain, a combination of vegetable essences, pure pepsin. They cure Dyspepsia and stomach troubles, because they can't help but cure." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. They are in lozenge form, pleasant to take, and contain nothing but pure pepsin, vegetable essences and bismuth, scientifically compounded. Your druggist will tell you they give universal satisfaction.

"GOLD, GOLD"

"Good," He Says, "But Comfort Better."

"Food that fits is better than a gold mine," says a grateful man.

"Before I commenced to use Grape-Nuts food no man on earth ever had a worse infliction from catarrh of the stomach than I had for years.

"I could eat nothing but the very lightest food and even that gave me great distress.

"I went through the catalogue of prepared foods but found them all (except Grape-Nuts) more or less indigestible, generating gas in the stomach, (which in turn produced headache and various other pains and aches) and otherwise unavailable for my use.

"Grape-Nuts food I have found easily digested and assimilated, and it has renewed my health and vigor and made me a well man again. The catarrh of the stomach has disappeared entirely with all its attendant ills, thanks to Grape-Nuts, which now is my almost sole food. I want no other." When the smallpox is around this winter take Heron's Eucalyptus Oil and become immune from the disease. Many persons have been vaccinated after using Heron's Oil for a wek, but it would not "take"—try the experiment and become immune.

There are now many cases of diphtheria, some fatal. Dr. Heron guarantees to cure any case that is not at the point of death already. The rteatment is so simple—use Heron's Eucalyptus Oil internally and externally and see how quickly the membrane "loosens"—a trial is sufficient.

Dr. Heron has manufactured Eucalyptus Oil for sixteen years and is the best posted man on its medicinal virtues—he has a secret process for refining and removes absolutely all the ether, the only injurious ingredient in Eucalyptus Oil. [NEWS REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.]

POLITICAL GAME WARMING UP.

PASADENA MAY SEE LIVELY TILT OVER SENATORSHIP.

Elmer Moody's Friends Grooming Him for State Place Now Held by "Borhard" Hahn—Speculation as to Who is to Wear Justice Congdon's Shoes—Munger-Henderson.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 1 South Raymond Avenue, Oct. 15.—Crown City politicians are getting more than usually busy these days, and what with the forthcoming State Senatorial fight, the justiceship contest and the administration's reported change of heart on municipal water, things certainly appear to be brightening up a bit.

The latest bunch of gossip along the political rialto comes in the shape of an inside announcement to his friends that Elmer I. Moody, one of the youngest lawyer politicians in the town, is to be a candidate against "Borhard" Hahn for State Senator this fall. The incumbent has made many enemies who would vote for anybody to see Hahn ousted. While Moody is a lawyer of repute, stands well among business men generally, and is said to have the backing of the leaders among local Republican ranks.

There is a possibility that in the face of these facts Hahn may decide not to run again, and, in fact, in an interview yesterday he intimated as much, although he refused to come out openly and speak his mind. In case Hahn withdraws, it would leave a clear field for Moody or some other man.

It is everywhere anticipated that the long-drawn-out contest for the Pasadena justiceship made vacant by the resignation of Judge Congdon will terminate when the Supervisors meet Monday. Wood is said to have a good show for the place. Backers of Van Etten claim, however, that he is in the lead for the place.

The interesting announcement is made that hereafter in municipal elections the Republican party leaders here will insist upon putting up a straight party ticket. Past experience is said to have proved disastrous to the idea of an independent candidate backed by party leaders.

Mayor Waterhouse and several others at the City Hall are said to have experienced a change of heart regarding the city and municipal water, and are believe with a majority of the people that municipal ownership really would be a good thing. His Honor is said to have let drop a remark defining his more recent attitude at the last Monday night star-chamber session of the city fathers.

MAY SUE THE CITY.

Henry Roberts, who was arrested by Chief of Police Pinkham about 7 o'clock Thursday night while strolling near the corner of Marengo avenue and Union street, declared yesterday that he will bring suit against the city for damages for his imprisonment. At the time of the arrest Chief Pinkham declared he thought the man responsible for the numerous complaints about night prowlings which came from that neighborhood, and he caused Roberts to spend the night in jail on suspicion. In the morning, finding that they could obtain no further information against Roberts and on the advice of Police Judge Wood, the police turned him loose.

LOST HIS ROLL.

Assaulted by two highwaymen and relieved of his money, about $11, was the experience of George W. Arthur while passing through Library Park Thursday night. Arthur is employed in Los Angeles and before starting for his home on Walnut street in this city he drew his pay. According to Arthur's version of the hold-up two men saw him receive the money and followed him here on the same car. He left the car on Union street and entered the park at the Holly street entrance. Beneath the shade of a tree near the northeast side two men sprang upon him and when he realized that they were after his money he fought them back but they were too much for him. The police claim to know nothing of the occurrence.

MUNGER-HENDERSON.

Miss Anne Munger, only daughter of Austin Munger of North Madison avenue, and LeRoy Henderson, youngest son of C. M. Henderson, were united in marriage yesterday evening by Rev. D. D. Meredith at the home of the bride's father.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of about seventy invited guests and the pretty bungalow home was beautified with flowers in honor of the event.

In the great living-room, where the guests assembled, quantities of white cosmos and smilax were used. In front of a curtain of smilax an altar was erected with tall vases of cosmos placed at either side. An aisle was formed by broad white satin ribbons, which extended to pedestals covered with green, and through this the wedding party passed. To the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March as rendered by Miss Anne Whitmore, the bridal party entered, C. Mortimer Henderson with the groom, leading. The matron of honor, Mrs. C. Mortimer Henderson, followed and the bride came last. Mrs. Henderson wore an exquisite gown of white chiffon over satin and carried white carnations. The bride's gown was also white chiffon, with a garniture of chantilly lace. She wore a veil edged with Honiton lace and fastened with a chaplet of orange blossoms. Her bouquet was a shower of lilies of the valley and as an ornament she wore a handsome sunburst of pearls and diamonds, the gift of the groom.

After congratulations Mr. and Mrs. Henderson left for a brief wedding journey and will be at home to their friends after November 10, at No. 589 North Madison avenue. Mr. Henderson is in the employ of The First National Bank and a popular young business man. The bride is distinguished for original beauty and has been a social favorite among a large circle of young friends.

PLAYA DEL REY, Oct. 14.—Last night the new Del Rey Gun Club, composed of Santa Monica Bay and Los Angeles sportsmen, dedicated its newly completed clubhouse. The occasion was a housewarming and banquet and the affair was enjoyed by nearly a hundred persons. Among the invited guests were members of the Recreation and Santa Monica Gun Clubs.

The clubhouse is a handsome structure of two stories and has just been finished and equipped at a cost of $10,000. It occupies a commanding site on the club's 280-acre tract and is well equipped in every particular for the opening of the shooting season tomorrow. The clubhouse contains twenty-two rooms and has a large banquet hall. A permanent lodgekeeper is installed and the club members are always at home there during the season. The grounds are well supplied with water, having no less than a hundred miner's inches of fresh water.

The officers of the organization are: C. A. Winship, president, and W. H. Stimson, secretary-treasurer.

WHITTIER.

QUAKER CITY NOTES.

WHITTIER, Oct. 14.—Bert Leggee, who was arrested at "Jim Town" on the charge of selling liquor without a license, did not wait for his trial, October 16, but appeared before Justice Gidley Friday and acknowledged his guilt. He was fined $150. Leggee did not request the return of the captured goods.

The Whittier heirs of the late Miss Helen Peabody of Pasadena will join in the suit to break the will. They are Helen, Harold and Ruth Peabody nieces and nephews.

A lively game of football, the first of the season, took place on the High School campus this afternoon between the High School and town teams. The score was 25 to 0 in favor of the High School.

HAPPY AFFAIR BIG BENEFIT.

LADIES OF HOLLYWOOD REAP FOR THE CHURCH.

Thousand Visitors Turn Out for the "International Market" and Find a Brilliant Scene and Jolly Entertainment—"Sold Out" Signs Displayed Before Closing Time.

Successful to a degree that pleased everybody was the "International Market" held yesterday afternoon and evening, at Hollywood, for the benefit of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The pretty affair was under the auspices of St. Catherine's Guild, composed of the young women of the church, and the management provided entertainment and fun for more than a thousand visitors.

The church people of Hollywood turned out en masse in an effort to raise $2000. The success of the entertainment is shown by the fact that almost all the money necessary was secured.

Under the trees, on the beautiful grounds of C. J. George, at Ivar street and Ocean View avenue, twenty booths were built. Chinese lanterns, strung artistically among the branches of the trees, made a pleasing background for the score of brilliantly-lighted booths which formed the street of the market of nations.

Clowns and tambourine girls, shouting and laughing along the midway, kept the gay company in the best of humor. Purse strings flew open and all were anxious to buy.

Goods at several of the stalls sold so rapidly that the dors were closed ahead of schedule time, and the sign "sold out" displayed.

The gypsy camp captured the crowd, and all were anxious to pass within the tent and have their fortunes told. At the campfire outside pretty girls in picturesque costumes pointed the way to the camp proper, where a comely-faced matron presided as queen of the gypsies.

The minstrel troupe, strolling from booth to booth, claimed attention, and their coon songs were enjoyed.

There was a real lovers' lane, just dark enough to be romantic.

Most curious of all was the sideshow, where the skeleton, the fat boy, and the snake charmer, held the boards.

A booth that attracted much attention was the Welsh Market, presided over by Mrs. Perry Jones. Sweet, juicy apples were sold by quaint Welsh maidens, who gathered many nickels for the church.

Mrs. E. W. Elliott had charge of the Mexican market, and a wondrous array of gorgeous Navajo blankets was displayed, together with a fine assortment of Mexican drawnwork.

Curios and souvenirs of the Golden West were sold at the handsome California Market, in charge of Mrs. H. J. Whitley. Every section of the State was represented.

Seldom has so much time and effort been spent on an affair of the kind, and the success of the open-air fete is due, in large part, to the women of Hollywood, who have striven to provide a delightful and novel outdoor entertainment which has given a jolly good time, and has brought needed dollars into the coffers of the church.

CATALINA ISLAND.

TUSSLE WITH SHARK.

AVALON, Oct. 14.—G. F. Steele of Chicago, who, with his family, is spending a month here, had a strenuous day's fishing yesterday. With his boatman, Capt. Harry Doss, he went up to the west end and found the ocean teeming with all sorts of marine creatures. First he took a couple of yellowtail and then ran onto a school of albicore, of which he took eleven, or parts of them, for the sharks levied tribute and compelled him to "divvy" with them. Along with the albicore were a lot of tuna and he had a royal battle with two of them, but before he could get them into the boat a huge shark took them both. The monster was said to be more than fifteen feet long. Finally the shark was hooked, but it ran away with the tackle.

While the anglers were fighting the shark a huge whale came up within a hundred feet of them and blew the air full of spray.

OCEAN PARK.

CARNIVAL'S GOOD START.

OCEAN PARK, Oct. 14.—The Venice Winter Carnival Association, an organization formed during the past week, has already made a good showing. The committee sent out to solicit subscriptions for the advertising fund had secured $3850 up to Friday night, and while only a partial report of yesterday's work could be obtained, it brought the total up to something over $400. This is in addition to the original purse of $5000, so that between nine and ten thousand dollars is now available.

This sum and what may be subscribed in the future will be devoted exclusively to the exploitation of the carnival project, in the newspapers, by attractive posters, and by such other means as the committee may decide upon. The committee is composed of Harry B. Goodman, E. Peltret and C. H. Brown.

The association has elected Dr. J. A. Stanwood, president, and J. C. Conklin, secretary, other committees, aside from that of advertising, being: Finance—J. R. Speck, H. L. Miller, J. G. "GOLD, GOLD"

"Good," He Says, "But Comfort Better."

"Food that fits is better than a gold mine," says a grateful man.

"Before I commenced to use Grape-Nuts food no man on earth ever had a worse infliction from catarrh of the stomach than I had for years.

"I could eat nothing but the very lightest food and even that gave me great distress.

"I went through the catalogue of prepared foods but found them all (except Grape-Nuts) more or less indigestible, generating gas in the stomach, (which in turn produced headache and various other pains and aches) and otherwise unavailable for my use.

"Grape-Nuts food I have found easily digested and assimilated, and it has renewed my health and vigor and made me a well man again. The catarrh of the stomach has disappeared entirely with all its attendant ills, thanks to Grape-Nuts, which now is my almost sole food. I want no other." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial tells the story. There's a reason.

HOLLYWOOD.

FLAMES ROUT SLEEPERS.

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 14.—The new Soule house on Dakota street was entirely destroyed by fire early yesterday morning, together with its contents. The occupants, H. Simms, wife and two children, who recently leased the place, were driven from their beds, making their exit from the upper windows by means of ropes formed of sheets. The furniture in the place was valued at about $9000, much of it being new. It was insured for $2500, and the house for $1500.

GOING TO BED HUNGRY

It Is All Wrong and Man Is the Only Creature That Does It.

The complete emptiness of the stomach during sleep adds greatly to the amount of emaciation, sleeplessness and general weakness so often met with. There is a perpetual change of tissues in the body, sleeping or waking, and the supply of nourishment ought to be somewhat continuous and food taken just before retiring, adds more tissue than is destroyed, and increased weight and vigor is the result. Dr. W. T. Cathell says: "All animals except man eat before sleep and there is no reason in Nature why man should form the exception to the rule."

If people who are thin, nervous and sleepless would take a light lunch of bread and milk or oatmeal and cream and at the same time take a safe, harmless stomach remedy like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in order to aid the stomach in digesting it, the result will be a surprising increase in weight, strength and general vigor. The only drawback has been that thin, nervous, dyspeptic people cannot digest and assimilate wholesome food at night or any other time. For such it is absolutely necessary to use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they will digest the food, no matter how weak the stomach may be, nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time.

Dr. Stevenson says: "I depend almost entirely upon Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in treating indigestion, because it is not a quack nostrum, and I know just what they contain, a combination of vegetable essences, pure pepsin. They cure Dyspepsia and stomach troubles, because they can't help but cure." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents per package. They are in lozenge form, pleasant to take, and contain nothing but pure pepsin, vegetable essences and bismuth, scientifically compounded. Your druggist will tell you they give universal satisfaction.

Heron's Eucalyptus Oil.

ITS MANY MEDICINAL VIRTUES.

When the smallpox is around this winter take Heron's Eucalyptus Oil and become immune from the disease. Many persons have been vaccinated after using Heron's Oil for a wek, but it would not "take"—try the experiment and become immune.

There are now many cases of diphtheria, some fatal. Dr. Heron guarantees to cure any case that is not at the point of death already. The rteatment is so simple—use Heron's Eucalyptus Oil internally and externally and see how quickly the membrane "loosens"—a trial is sufficient.

Dr. Heron has manufactured Eucalyptus Oil for sixteen years and is the best posted man on its medicinal virtues—he has a secret process for refining and removes absolutely all the ether, the only injurious ingredient in Eucalyptus Oil. Be safe and use Heron's oil from the slightest cold to the worst case of pneumonia.

Dr. N. C. Heron, the original manufacturer of Eucalyptus Oil in California.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Trading in the produce market was light yesterday with shipping demand active; stocks were in fair supply in nearly all lines and prices were well maintained.

Fresh ranch eggs remained at 37 cents, with conditions slightly firmer and a good demand for northern and storage stocks.

With an active demand for fresh and storage stocks the butter market ended the week in excellent condition. Dealers were enabled to fill all orders for fresh creamery, but no surplus was left at the close.

Colorado Jonathan apples were in brisk demand at 2.25 to 2.50.

Four cars of bananas arrived yesterday, the first receipts for the week, and stocks were firm at 4½ to 5 cents, with the prospect of 5 cents flat the coming week.

Grapes were scarce and in strong request, Muscats jobbing freely at 1.15 to 1.25, while Tokays were bringing outside figures.

Plums were in fair demand with little change in prices. French prunes jobbing at 1.00 to 1.10; ex-storage Kelseys moving at 1.00.

Pomegranates continued easy at 75 cents flat.

Quinces were bringing 1.00 and fancy crated persimmons outside quotations.

Peaches were in moderate demand at unchanged prices.

Strawberries were steady at 8 cents for Tropicos, and 6 to 7 for Gardenas.

Watermelons and cantaloupes were unchanged with demand fairly active.

The situation in citrus fruit was unchanged.

Pears were steady at 6 cents for fancy, and 4 to 5 for common.

Vegetables were quiet and featureless, tomatoes jobbing at 25 to 30 cents; cabbage 35 to 50; cucumbers, 30 to 35.

Selected sweet potatoes were jobbing at 1.40 and common stock at 1.00 to 1.25, whites moving at 90 to 1.00 and reds 75 to 1.25.

Fish of all kinds were in abundance, and lobsters plenty, as the Chinese are the heaviest buyers of fish in this market, trading was quiet yesterday and will so continue until Tuesday, owing to the Chinese festivities.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The bank statement proved an enigma again today, as has come to be expected, owing to the large share in the banking operations by institutions outside the clearinghouse which do not report results to be included in the bank statement. The stock market remained so impassive on the appearance of the statement that fluctuations were feeble with the closing easy at small declines. The attendance at the stock exchange was small owing to the large number of absentees in attendance at the Bankers' Congress. The banks' showing of a decrease in loans of $29,456,600 makes a record with the sole exception of the reduction for the first week of September. Repayments of temporary borrowings by the City of New York with the proceeds of the yearly tax payments figure in the showing. It is believed also that out-of-town institutions have made loans during the week in displacement of the New York bank loans. Loans by local trust companies are believed to have played a small part in the results and the recent lending of foreign funds has almost come to a stop. The stock market has indicated some liquidation during the week, but nothing like the figure reported in the bank statement. Preliminary estimates of the cash change based on figures supplied by the banks themselves promised an increase of about a million dollars, while the bank statement shows an actual decrease of $2,350,800. No explanation is offered for the discrepancy except as it may represent a ratification of the previous statements which has shown unexplained growth in the cash reserves. The foreign exchange market was unusually strong for a Saturday and it was supposed that some active demand for bills is due to buying to cover maturities of former standing loans. Other large maturities of this character will fall due during the coming week. Sterling exchange declined at Paris again, and a small parcel of gold was withdrawn from the bank of England for shipment to France. Sterling exchange reacted slightly at Berlin, but discounts advanced again at that center, at Paris and at London. The international pressure for gold is shown to be fully maintained by these developments. Total sale of bonds, par value, $2,021,000.

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Heaviness in wheat at the start vanished before brisk buying, led by a broker for a prominent grain operator, who for a time absorbed all offerings. December opened a shade lower to a shade higher, at 85⅝ to 85¾, and was bid up to 86⅛. The buying was on a very liberal basis and estimated in the aggregate at 1,000,000 bushels. The market assumed every appearance of bullishness, although the news was not of an influential character. While the bullishness was in full swing the leader in the buying movement withdrew his support, and simultaneously came reports from the Northwest that liquidation was in progress for the same operator. The early buyers began unloading and a break in prices resulted. The December option declined to 85⅜@85½ under the pressure. Sufficient buying orders at the decline were filled to advance December a shade from the bottom, the close being easy at 85½ cents. Trading in corn was lifeless, but the market had a firm undertone. December started unchanged to a shade higher, at 44⅜@44½@44⅝, became firm at 44½ with upturning wheat, but declined later and closed at the bottom price for the day, 44¼. Oats were firm at a slightly lower range; December closed at 28⅜ after ranging between 28⅝@28⅜. Holders of deferred options in provisions showed a disposition to sell at the start, but offerings were readily taken by prominent speculators and the market held firm at a small decline. January pork closed 7½ cents down, at 12.55. Lard is 5 cents off, ribs are 2½@5 cents lower. December touched 86⅛, but weakened on general profit-taking. The close was easy with December down ⅛@¼ at 85½. Close: Wheat, December 85½, May 86⅝. Corn: October 50½, December 44¼, old 45; May 43⅝, July 43⅝. SAN FRANCISCO MARKETS.

FRUIT, GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There was but little change in prices for fruits today and market conditions offered no new or interesting features. While there was some extra buying for over-Sunday requirements trading as a rule was restricted closely to absolute needs. Table grapes in large open boxes were in heavy supply and save for a few fancy brands which were well cared for at maximum quotation, the movement was sluggish and values irregular. Business closed with a heavy surplus uncared for. Values for peaches were unaltered. High quality of nutmeg melons and cantaloupes sold briskly at outside figures, but watermelons met with limited sale. There was nothing new in citrus fruits, the demand being moderate and prices steady. Jamica oranges continued neglected and will doubtless net a heavy loss to the consignor. Little life was in the potato market today and in the absence of important business, values were without variance. Onions were firm, maximum quotations being asked for the finest selections. The market for miscellaneous vegetables was steady. Tomatoes were plentiful and packers got cheaper sorts at from 25 cents to 30 cents a box.

BUY SIX PER CENT PREFERRED STOCK OF THE ANTIOAK LEATHER CO.

The Jepsen Saddlery Company of Los Angeles, among the largest manufacturers of harness in the southwest, says: "If anyone interested in the Antioak Leather Company stock wants to know about the leather in actual use, send them to us. We have been unable to get all of that make that we need and can use, and have just had a big order—for heavy harness to be made of Antioak Leather."

The gratifying sales of stock and enlarged working capital will enable the Antioak Leather Company to produce much greater output and satisfy the calls of the Jepsen Company and others.

The 6 per cent Preferred Stock is still offered to subscribers to A LIMITED AMOUNT AT $9, WITH A BONUS OF COMMON STOCK. The Antioak Leather Company will prove an industry within a short time to which investors will look with satisfaction if they have become stockholders, and regret if they fail to avail themselves of the opportunity now offered to obtain the stock at present prices. STUDYING UNNATURAL NATURE.

School Children Gain Wisdom Via Puny Chipmunk, Featherless Bird and Bootenless Bean.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—More than $25,000,000 was asked yesterday by the Board of Education of this city for next year's expenses. Comptroller Grout, commenting on this request before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment said:

"It seems to me that the only way to achieve anything in the improvement of the schools is to give the Board of Education all it wants and demands and then trust to good fortune that the good things are done along with the useless things."

Clarence A. Davis of the North Side Board of Trade said to the board that the managers of the big department stores here had written to him that the public school graduates who applied to them for employment were deficient in penmanship and arithmetic, grammar and spelling and their nature studies had not increased their observation or initiative.

Describing a visit he had made to one of the public schools for the purpose of looking into nature studies, Mr. Davis said he had found a puny chipmunk in a box, a featherless bird in a cage, and a sickly bean growing in a covered box. When he asked about them he said he was told by the teacher that Superintendent Maxwell believed they increased the power of observation of the pupils.

CONSPIRED TO DEFRAUD CITY?

Weaver's Counsel Trying to Establish Fact in Hearing of Case Against Philadelphia Officials.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14.—The hearing in the case of Abraham L. English, director of public safety during the administration of Samuel H. Ashbridge, and others accused of conspiracy to defraud the city, was resumed today before Magistrate Eisen Brown.

The testimony presented yesterday tended to show that in the construction of the new smallpox hospital inferior material had been used; that Building Inspector James D. Finley had reported falsely upon the work, and that the original specifications had been fraudulently changed.

Former Judge Gordon, who is prosecuting the case for Mayor Weaver, today endeavored to establish the fact that a criminal conspiracy to defraud the city existed among the defendants in awarding contracts, and in the construction of the building.

ONIONS VALUABLE.

Chicago Man Has a Fine Ranch Within the City Limits That Brought Him a Fortune.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That rich agricultural lands exist within the city limits of Chicago, few persons realize. The onion farm of A. L. Jones at Kedzie and Belmont avenues is an example of what can be done in farming not more than twenty minutes' ride from the City Hall. The farm began five years ago. It consisted of ten acres then, but it has expanded into fifty. It is managed by Jones's twenty-one-year-old son.

"You can't tell me," said Mr. Jones, "that the young man today hasn't the opportunities his father had. That is all nonsense. Now, my son Lyman married when he was 19 years old. He has been going to school and farming at odd hours. Together in five years we have made a profit of nearly $60,000. This year's profits will be $20,000."

IT WAS GOLDIE'S BABY.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14.—Miss Goldie Yell, the nurse employed in the family of George Reagen, Alton, Ill., who was charged by Mrs. Reagen with kidnaping Baby Geo. H. Reagan last Monday, was found today in St. Louis, at the home of Mrs. Frank Lindhorst. Goldie Yell admitted her identity and confirmed the reports circulated since the alleged kidnaping that the baby is her child, and declared her intention of retaining possession. Mrs. Lindhorst confirmed Miss Yell's statements, and said she was present at the child's birth, July 30, 1903, Goldie Yell being known to Mrs. Lindhorst at that time as "Mrs. Leo Rowe."

DENSE SMOKE RETARDS RESCUE.

FREDERICKSTOWN (Pa.) Oct. 14.—The six miners entombed in the Clyde mine yesterday have not yet been rescued. Parties worked in short shifts all night, but the dense smoke, despite the work of the fans, made progress slow. The entombed men are 1500 feet from the pit mouth, and hopes of reaching them alive are not entertained.

MACKEY WOMEN RELENT.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. John W. Mackey has, according to an announcement made today, contributed $1000 to the parochial school of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, Twenty-first street, near Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, the gift coming from London, the present home of Mrs. Mackey. This is the school that in July last was refused a gift by Mrs. Clarence H. Mackey, her daughter-in-law, who in her letter in answer to the appeal for funds, arraigned the parochial school system as a menace to the country.

WIRELESS TORPEDO BOAT.

Boston Genius Invents One That Can be Operated from the Shore Without Using Wires.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Charles E. Alden, a Boston inventor, has perfected the model for an exceedingly destructive torpedo boat, which can be operated by wireless telegraphy from the shore, without a single man required on board of her.

His device is exceedingly simple and the secret is closely guarded, but without being within 200 yards of his torpedo he can submerge it, raise it to the surface, compel it to strike an object or to turn around and return to the shore.

By harnessing the forces of wireless electricity, he can stand on the shore with his transmitting apparatus and with a touch here and there on his instrument working like a typewriter, transmit electric impulses through the air, and by means of the air alone, to the miniature torpedo boat.

"What can be done for 200 yards," he said, "can be done for three miles. The principle is the same, and it is only a question of transmitting power."

BABOON AT LARGE.

TOPEKA (Kas.) Oct. 14.—A baboon named Oliver, described by his owners and others who have seen him as large and ferocious, is at large on the Dragoon River, thirty-five miles south of Topeka. Oliver escaped from a traveling menagerie early this week and has been terrorizing women and children and raiding farms within a radius of several miles since that time. The animal escaped to an orchard and when the keepers tried to capture it left the orchard and took refuge in a ravine filled with undergrowth. The keepers abandoned the search and went to Scranton.

JANUARY JONES' SASSY SAL MINE

Is the Wonder of Goldfield

January Jones Who Divided a Million in Eleven Months.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 7.—January Jones is making a marvelous record with his now famous Sassy Sal gold mine. The eyes of Goldfield and all Southern Nevada are turned toward his operations on this wonderful mineral discovery. The mine is making good every claim he has advanced for it.

Now comes the news that the stock is about to make a tremendous advance. Investors who have inside news about the coming jump in price are deluging Jones with orders for stock. The telegraph wires are being kept hot with reservations, and all Goldfield is expectant and excited.

Everybody's attention is riveted on Jones, as his moves in the mining world are those of a master craftsman, who is known as a safe man for investors to follow. His great January strike, that returned $10,000 for every $100 invested, gave him an army of followers, and then the Bullfrog Eclipse mine, which he organized, and in which he allowed his friends to secure 100,000 shares last April at 15 cents each, is today selling on the Wall Street Exchange on a basis of a $460,000 valuation for the mine, 46 cents per share, or an advance of over 200 per cent. in six months.

Such accomplishments are evidence of his ability to enrich his followers, and the discerning public with idle funds never overlook the chance to cooperate with men like Jones.

Write or telegraph and reserve the number of shares of Goldfield Sassy Sal stock you want and remit at the rate of 25 cents per share. The allotment won't last long, and if another strike is made in the mine within a week, as is expected, the price will be advanced without notice.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—We send personal answers to all letters of inquiry about the mine, and will, upon request, furnish illustrated prospectuses, engineers' reports and facts backed by banks.

TEMPERING GOLD, SILVER AND COPPER!

This is what is being done by the Tempered Gold Surgical Instrument Co.

Which owns the only process known for tempering gold, silver and copper.

The demand for tempered gold surgical instruments, razors, settings for jewels and tempered gold in sheet for various purposes is far beyond the capacity of the company's present factory.

The capital stock is only $100,000, which is owned by the incorporators and valued above par, none of which has been put on the market.

The company owns the Vaughn Secret Process for tempering gold, silver and copper, whose value would justify a capitalization ten times greater than it has.

The company must increase the capacity of its factory and employ more gold workers.

For such purpose it offers 5000 of its shares at $1.25 a share. It can be shown that this stock is now worth many times more.

Full and accurate information will be cheerfully given at the company's office.

R. E. Muncy, whose name sounds the same as that of R. E. Munsey, though spelled differently, says he has been annoyed by being mistaken for the latter, who figured in court through being charged with having stolen horses in his possession. Muncy, a real estate man, also is a lover of horse flesh and a member of the Driving Club, and he has fine animals for which he pays cold cash; Munsey, horse dealer, has been found with a number of animals, but his ownership is questioned, as well as his method of acquiring possession. That's the difference between Muncy and Munsey.

STEINWAY

At the zenith of his power and fame Richard Wagner, founder of a musical era, parent of marvelous operas, master of stagecraft, incomparable composer, writer and poet, penned this gratifying tribute to the manufacturers of the Steinway piano. Wagner, possessed of a marvelous inborn and cultivated sense of tone, found no equal to the Steinway; famous musicians, long before the advent of the composer of "Lohengrin" knew the Steinway as the world's standard piano; notable musical artists of the present day are unanimous in its praise.

Unlike most art creations, the Steinway piano is sold at a price so low as to be inconsistent with its artistic value.

MILLION CROP STARTS EAST.

Wonderful Vegetable Output is Earliest Ever.

Celery and Tomatoes Make Greatest Showing.

Only the Finest Shipped, East "Catches on."

Southern California vegetable growers will reap a cash harvest of not less than a million dollars from their great crop this season. The output is the earliest and will be the greatest ever grown. Celery alone will require 2500 cars to move East, and tomatoes make a remarkable showing. The East is "catching on" to the good things we ship.

Full one month earlier than last year, the busy season for shipment of Southern California vegetables to the eastern markets has begun. The season will be the most prosperous ever known to vegetable growers in this State. The crop is the greatest ever grown.

The remarkable development of the vegetable-shipping industry is to be seen by a comparison of figures of last year and this. The Vegetable Union which comprises the principal growers and shippers of Southern California, last year began its shipments to the eastern markets on October 28. This year the first carloads went out on September 28.

Last year the second carload went out from the Vegetable Union on November 3. This year constant shipments commenced a month earlier.

The advantages effected through the thorough organization of the vegetable growers into the Vegetable Union has brought about, through proper distribution and improved methods of packing, a greatly increased demand for Southern California vegetables in all of the large eastern cities. This demand, it is confidently expected, will continue to increase, until Southern California will feed the largest portion of the winter-locked cities of the East each season.

CELERY AND TOMATOES.

Last year the Vegetable Union sent out 1903 carloads of celery. This year it will ship 2500 carloads. These shipments are just beginning, and will continue until the middle of March.

Thirty carloads of tomatoes were sent East last year. This season the demand will call for 130 carloads. In the demand for tomatoes alone there is prospect for building up a remarkable industry. At the present time large orders are being filled for Atlantic Coast cities.

These tomatoes are the very cream of the local crop. Mostly they come from the Eagle Rock gardens, as the Vegetable Union handles all the products from this district.

The choicest of the crop is gathered by the growers and hauled into the packing-house on East Third street. There they are carefully wrapped in tissue papers and placed in chip crates, each holding about half a dozen tomatoes. The fruit is not packed in a green state, as was formerly the custom. Each tomato has a rich red color, and is put up in as dainty a style as the highest-priced orange. They are packed in ventilated crates and placed in iced cars, so that they arrive in the eastern markets at the very top-notch of perfection.

The Vegetable Union is making a special point of not sending out green or unmatured fruits. For some years this method was adopted by shippers, and as a result the weazened, tasteless products that reached the eastern markets gave Southern California vegetables a black eye. This has now been overcome.

There were 400 carloads of cauliflower shipped by the union last season, and this year there will be fully 100 carloads more. The cabbage shipments are as yet problematical, as it is too early to make any estimates.

PILES OF MONEY COMING.

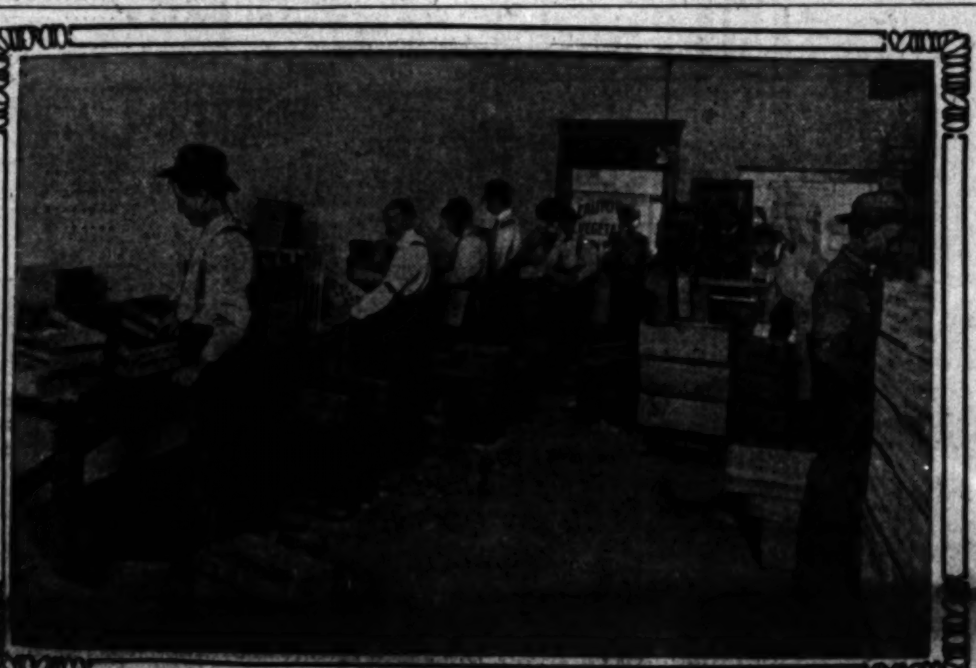
Here are figures, in round numbers, showing the wealth which will flow into the pockets of Southern California vegetable growers this season. These are based on the estimates of one of the largest handlers of these products in the West:

For celery, $500,000.
For cauliflower, $100,000.
For tomatoes, $50,000.
For cabbage, $25,000.

These figures are on merely the four products. Aside from them the vegetable union ships out mixed carloads of green beans, peas, lettuce, radishes, etc., which fetch fancy prices, thus bringing up the total of income from garden products to over a million dollars.

Besides these Southern California products the Vegetable Union is handling all the crops for the Merced and Turlock Sweet Potato Growers' Association. This district sends out this year 1000 carloads of sweet potatoes. It handles all the product of the Orange county celery fields, and also the crops of the Jersey Island Celery Growers' Association.

Twenty-one packing-houses are used in the handling of these vegetables, and a constantly increasing corps of men is employed. The splendid results obtained by the growers this season will encourage the rapid extension of acreage devoted to garden products. This is destined to become one of the most important industries of the Southwest.



Experts packing the finest tomatoes at Vegetable Union headquarters for shipment to Eastern cities.

VISITOR FROM BIG ISLAND.

Head of Australian Chambers of Commerce Looking Toward Assimilation of American Principles.

F. Beale, president of the Australian Council of Chambers of Commerce, was in Los Angeles yesterday. Mr. Beale is on his way to England, via the United States, and is looking at American methods of publicity. Yesterday he spent in an examination of our Chamber of Commerce and its system, and in an inspection of Southern California oil wells.

Mr. Beale is a typical, well-groomed Englishman. Tall and finely-framed, and about 60 years of age, he seems to be now in the best part of his career.

Australian Chambers of Commerce, by his account, are not devoting themselves to agriculture and horticulture, but rather to the amelioration of industrial conditions.

A new industry which bids fair for the island continent is its vast areas of undeveloped oil. Said Mr. Beale: "At present oil is more expensive in Australia than coal, but there is a large amount of development going on, and in this respect it is fair to add that Australia is learning from America.

"The greatest industries at present are the mining of gold and the growing and marketing of wool. Australia has vast gold fields yet undeveloped, and mining will show no abatement for years to come. As is well known, a large part of the world's supply of wool comes from us."

Conditions generally have improved in Australia during the past few years, according to Mr. Beale. The country is again picking up after its great season of drouth, and prosperity is reviving the hearts and refilling the purses of impoverished ranchmen.

Mr. Beale is looking up not only commercial, industrial and development conditions in Southern California, but will study them throughout the United States.

FACTORY LISTING WORK.

The Chamber of Commerce has just begun sending out, under Mr. Gurley's direction, its factory-listing schedules. The acting secretary believes that with the incoming company of Easterners are many men seeking a chance to invest, but knowing a few legitimate enterprises, and at the same time fearing to trust their confidences in general advertisements.

SCOTTY "COME TO!"

Says He'll Get Off the Notoriety Stage and Invest His Money in Other Ways.

Walter Scott, the "Scotty" of high-speed fame, has been shown a great light and has displayed the good sense of reading wisdom by its rays.

Hereafter he will be Scott, Death Valley miner, and he declares that "Scotty, speed maniac" is no more. His spectacular bids for notoriety have profited him only a little selfish satisfaction which he has been wise enough not to consider lasting fame. He has abandoned his plan of trying to lower his own railroad record to Chicago, and at least until some other person takes a few hours off the time he made in his admittedly foolhardy trip, he will be content to rest upon whatever laurels that achievement won for him.

Had he been left to his own inclinations and desires he probably would continue his harmless effort to attract attention to himself, but he has harkened to good advice given him by the one man whom he trusts above all others.

Scott had a heart-to-heart talk with Rol King yesterday during which he was made to view things and particularly his own actions in a different light. Now he will retire from the notoriety stage and seek a proper and legitimate avenue for the expenditure of the great sums of money which he has always contended are available from his supposed mysterious mine.

King talked plainly to Scott, told him the public is weary of hearing about what he is going to do, and made him see the futility of continuing the actual throwing away of money on useless railroad trips, profitable only in that they advertised some railroad.

STANDARD OIL WANTS ALL.

Monopoly to Kill Others as Well as the Puente.

Rockefeller Sold Much Vile Oil at Riverside.

Engine and Stove Fuel Sells at Five a Gallon.

That it is not the Puente alone that the Standard is trying to crush, but all independent refineries in Southern California, is being shown mere clearly every day. At Coachella, in Riverside county, the Murphy Oil company, a short time since, put up two 7500-gallon tanks for engine distillates, and has been doing a thriving business selling the output of its Los Angeles refinery to ranchers who operate more than two score of pumping plants covering the country for miles. The Murphy has been delivering its distillate so that the farmers have been getting better and cheaper service than they have ever had before.

Some ten days ago a representative of the Standard arrived in Coachella and spent several days looking over the situation. From his remarks and actions it is fully expected the next few weeks will witness the arrival of a crew of Standard men to erect tanks and the work of crushing the rival who has dared to trespass upon Rockefeller's domain will begin. If the Puente adheres to the practice it has often followed of going where the Standard goes there is certain to be a merry three-cornered fight on very soon. Down will go prices and the rancher will get the benefit, of course, but will he display sufficient business sense to sustain competition. Will he divide his patronage and so keep up the condition. It will be up to him, to each and every individual in the Coachella region to ask himself, "Do I want this era of lower prices to continue or do I want to pay twenty-five cents a gallon for my engine fuel after a little while just so John D. Rockefeller may be able to donate a little more to eastern colleges and foreign mission boards?"

Seldom indeed are consumers asked to pay more for the local product than for the goods shipped by the Standard from Point Richmond. It has been the policy to meet almost every cut, however disastrous, the Standard has made so far and local men have even underbid the great monopoly in a number of cases where competitive bids have been called for. The limit may be reached some day, however, and when that comes the consumer must be the one to finally settle the question of prices to be paid for the future. If you doubt what these will be read the list of prices in San Francisco published in The Times last Sunday.

OIL HAS IMPROVED.

Riverside is one of the centers of the fight between the Standard and the Puente. The conditions are interesting and are outlined by The Times' correspondent as follows:

"The oil business here is divided between the Puente company and the Standard Oil. The Puente controls the local retail market for fine grades of illuminating and fuel oils. The Standard has a monopoly of gasolines and cheap fuel oils. The Standard gasoline is delivered for 5½ cents per gallon for engine use, while the Puente charges 6½ cents for the same grades of fuel oils. The Puente is buying high grade gasoline for stoves at 13½ cents and peddling it for 16 cents per gallon.

"Some of the Puente prices are as follows: Kerosene, 13 cents per gallon delivered by tank wagons; calcium light oil, 150, $1.50 per five-gallon can; Our Special, 150 fire test, 49 gravity, $1.25 per five-gallon can; Monarch Gasoline, $1.25 per five-gallon can; 72 Gasoline, 25 cents a gallon.

"The Standard sells Pearl oil at $1.50 per can, which is practically as good as the Puente oil of the same price. Standard Red Crown gasoline, a high grade, sells for the same price as the Puente product.

"The Puente sells Pennsylvania oil and the Standard puts Ohio oil into this market.

"A. N. Younglove handles the Puente business here and has two tank wagons on the street continually. He has business for three, but the prices are so close that he can not afford to pay more than two crews. The Standard business is under the management of Simeon W. Dew.

STANDARD'S VILE OIL.

"Merchants here state that before the Puente company entered the field the Standard sold rotten oil. They had one tank of fair oil and another as yellow as vinegar. When competition came they sent in cars, shipped away the poor oil and put a product equal to the Puente oil on the market.

"Until three weeks ago, the Standard operated under the name of the Penn Oil Company, but now they have thrown off all disguise and are frankly in the field under their own name. Agents of the Standard stated here last week that they would drive the Puente out of business."

There is food for reflection in this. What will be the effect upon the consumer in Riverside if the Standard's agents make good their threat? Let the experience of the past with the Standard's vile product answer. Does any sane man suppose that the fight that Mr. Rockefeller is waging today, with its accompanying cost and annoyance, will cause him to have a change of heart or that he will treat the unfortunates who will be compelled to patronize him when he has won, any better than he did before competition came in?

FIVE CENTS A GALLON.

Santa Ana, Orange and vicinity are other centers where the fight is on and waging fiercely. There too the hardest competition is in the refined fuel market. The following are the average retail prices in Santa Ana and Orange:

Engine distillate, delivered by tank wagons in bulk or drums, 7½ to 10 cents per gallon; stove distillates, 6½ cents per gallon in bulk; gasoline, per single gallon, 20 cents and 90 cents per five-gallon can; kerosene in bulk, 15 cents and 60 to 65 cents for five-gallon can; special brands, 75 cents to $1.50 per five-gallon can.

In Orange county the only competition is between the Standard Oil and the Puente. Prices in general have fallen during the last eighteen months, or since the Standard's control with the Puente expired on April 1, 1904.

Dealers in Orange, Santa Ana, Riverside, San Bernardino and this city generally consider the Standard and local products about equal as to safety and efficiency. This of course applies to what the great monopoly sells now, not to some that it has sold in the past.

At Anaheim both companies have established headquarters for supplying the trade of the surrounding country. The Standard has erected four steel tanks and the Puente three. Delivery wagons are operated all over the surrounding country and fuel for pumping engines is being brought right to the consumer as low as five cents a gallon for distances as great as fifteen miles by wagon. The benefits to irrigation companies, private ranchers and municipalities are to obvious to require comment.

VERNON PROUD OF PROGRESS.

FEAST WILL FORM PART OF THE CELEBRATION TODAY.

Rejuvenation of a Charming Locality is the Prime Object of an Enterprising Population Which Will Unite With the Coming "Greater City" of Southland.

Vernon will celebrate today the success of her recent election in favor of incorporation. Proud of the promise already within her limits of a healthy growth, the newly made citizens of the town [illegible] avenue, [illegible] this morning the beeves will be slaughtered and cooked.

All Vernon is invited to a feast, which has not been arranged for the sole purpose of tickling the palates of the Vernonites. Beyond this there is a stronger motive, for, rising to her place of importance as a corporate city, Vernon refuses to have within her limits the odoriferous city dumps. These dumps, squatted directly in the middle of the city and occupying about ten acres of otherwise valuable land, are an eyesore to the citizens.

Those who advocate the ousting of the dumps will attend the barbecue today. It is probable that no official action will be taken, but for the first time plans will be discussed by the officials of the town which have as their object the removal of these unsightly piles of rubbish and débris. The dumps must go, they declare, to make room for the erection of brick warehouses and to provide sites for manufacturing enterprises.

"There is a rare stimulus to business interests in Vernon," said Trustee W. S. Holland yesterday. "Our town is expanding, and we can now offer superior advantages to those desiring to engage in manufacturing enterprises.

"There is an air of business about the community lying so close to the extreme southeastern limits of Los Angeles, and many new residences are being built and plans are on foot for grading of streets and laying of sidewalks.

"The Southern Pacific Railroad is running a spur of track right through the center of the town, and on this spur two large lumber companies are unloading huge piles of lumber to be used in the building of the town. There are three large oil refineries already in operation within the corporate limits of the town; a tannery, and an oak leather manufactury.

"The center of Vernon thought, however, and the acme of all plans which have the improvement of the town in view, is the ultimate desire to unite with Los Angeles."

When the question of incorporation was first broached the larger one of joining forces finally with the City of the Angels was kept well in the background. There is no attempt now to hide the desire to become a part of Los Angeles, and every effort will be made toward the consummation of this plan.

The town is now served with the old steam "dummy" line running out on Santa Fé avenue as far as Vernon avenue. The dream of the Vernonites is a street car line into the center of Los Angeles with a reasonable service. When the growth of Vernon shall demand a better street car service, the Los Angeles Railway, it is said, will electrize the dummy line which already has the poles set and the wires strung for a considerable distance.

SUGAR MAN HERE.

President of Vermont Maple Sugar Association Compares Sweet Product With Express Train.

Perry Chase—just plain Perry Chase—president of the Vermont Maple Sugar Association, and a resident of East Fairfield, Vt., is visiting his nephew, P. J. Chase of this city, and his daughter in San Bernardino. Mr. Chase is a large producer of sugar and said yesterday to a reporter:

"We make maple sugar much quicker now than we used to. It's like coming across the continent; we used to come behind an ox team, but now we come in a Pullman train. We used to boil sugar slow, and it took a long time to make it, but now the pans are shallow and we use more heat, producing the sugar in much shorter time. In making maple syrup, we run the sap in at one end of the pan, and it runs out as syrup at the other end, without ever having stopped on the way."

SAW MOBBING OF HARRIMAN.

Pasadena Man Describes the Rioting in Tokio.

Railroad Magnate Ten Days Under Protection.

Conditions in China Better Than in Japan.

That the Orient has not had time to recover its civic equilibrium, after the throes of the recent war, is amply attested by the narratives of those recently returned from the scenes of strife. Among these is F. H. Long, capitalist, clubman and traveler, whose winter home is in Pasadena. Mr. Long was of the party which accompanied Secretary Taft on the Manchuria, which sailed from San Francisco on July 8.

A keen observer of sociological and [illegible] the most interesting story is that of a hitherto undescribed riot which resulted in the removal by the government of Japan of President E. H. Harriman of the Southern Pacific from Tokio to Nikko, the "Temple City."

F. H. LONG.

"The Harriman party sailed on the Siberia some time after the departure of the Manchuria," said Long, "and it was doomed to bad luck from the start, apparently. In the first place the officers of the Siberia were so elated over the presence of their famous guest that they left the mails for the Orient on the pier, and sailed through the Golden Gate without them. This was bad enough, for the complaints upon the arrival of the vessel at her destination were the subject of cable discourse and threatened revocation of subsidies for some days, but it appeared that the bills covering the effects of the Harriman party had been left in San Francisco in those same mail packets, and with the exception of the light hand luggage of the party, everything they had was inexorably placed in storage. Mr. Harriman had to buy a clean shirt.

Mr. Schwerin and Mr. Harriman went to the Imperial Hotel in Tokio for a short rest, but they didn't get it, for their troubles were only just begun. Discontent in Tokio and environs was at its height, and a bad faux pas by the director-general of the Tokio municipal police precipitated the trouble that resulted in government effacement of Mr. Harriman. Agitators were speaking in the streets to small knots of malcontents for several days before they agreed on a mass meeting in Euno Park. Then came the riots.

"After the little district or ward police stations had been demolished by the infuriated crowds they swept into the beautiful Euno Park, and literally pulled its trees out by the roots, leaving what was a pleasant resort a devastated wilderness. It was here that the trouble fomented that involved practically all of the foreigners in the city. A crafty speaker who knew of the prominence and presence of Mr. Harriman told the mob that he was one of those who had advised President Roosevelt, in the terms of the obnoxious treaty and urged violence. Thousands of coolies were almost immediately in motion to surround the hotels of the city, and my 'rickshaw was caught and borne along by the tide that swept down one of the streets toward the foreign quarter.

"Realizing the temper of the populace the government hurried about 250 of the men of the regular regiments quartered near by to the hotel, and the mob was pressed back. In the meantime it was learned that Mr. Harriman was the temporary object of their wrath. A large armed escort was quickly sent for him and a special train conveyed the railway magnate to the beautiful temple city of Nikko, about ninety miles away. During the exit from the hotel Mr. Harriman was struck by a small stone, and a member of his party was badly battered, but as the troops then prepared to fire the mob, which was unorganized, hesitated—and was lost."

Speaking of industrial conditions, Mr. Long said he found that a better state of affairs obtained in China than in Japan, where the agricultural population is seriously feeling the drain of the war. He said: "My trip to the estates of T. Horimi, where I was a guest for some weeks, carried me through several of the islands of Nippon, remarkably that of Miyajima, the sacred isle and to Dogo, where are now hot springs that in point of medicinal qualities and in excellence of equipment are superior to any of the European 'Bads.'

"The people of Japan have been sorely tried by the drain of this war, and the small farmers are even compelled to sell all their rice and to buy with its proceeds inferior foods on which to live. It is this state of affairs that created such intense indignation throughout the islands when it was learned that Russia would pay no indemnity. The government party was, of course, right in accepting peace on any terms, but this has not yet been made apparent to the commonality."

REAL MASONIC RULERS COMING.

EASTERN STAR GRAND CHAPTER CONVENES TOMORROW.

Nearly Seven Hundred Delegates from All Sections of California Will be in Attendance—Many Private Social Entertainments Arranged for the Visitors by Local Members.

The thirty-third annual communication of the Grand Chapter of California Order of the Eastern Star will convene in Los Angeles this week, and already delegates have begun to arrive from all parts of the State. There will be sessions of the Grand Chapter every day throughout the week except Saturday, Blanchard's Hall and the Masonic Temple being the two rallying points for the meetings.

Tomorrow morning will be devoted to an inspection of the Southern California Masonic Home at East San Gabriel, and this will be the first opportunity that has been afforded for members to see the splendid place that has been provided by the Masonic bodies of Southern California for aged members of the order.

The Grand Chapter will hold its initial session on Tuesday in Blanchard's Hall, and in the evening there will be a reception to the grand officers at the Masonic Temple. On Wednesday evening there will be a reception and ball at Playa del Rey, for which elaborate preparations have been made. Tickets sold at the hall will be good for the round trip.

On Thursday evening the grand officers will give an exemplification of the work at Blanchard's Hall, and the last session of the Grand Chapter will be held Friday.

In addition to the routine of the week many private social entertainments have been arranged for visiting delegates. Mrs. C. A. Routzahn and Mrs. R. T. Rankin, chairman and secretary respectively of the Committee on Arrangements, have arranged the details so that it is anticipated that this meeting of the Grand Chapter may surpass in interest any of the previous gatherings. Between 600 and 700 delegates are expected to be in the city, and most of them will remain throughout the week.

CHANCE FOR BOYS.

Street Waifs to be Provided With a Place Which Will Really be a Home.

A philanthropic scheme recently evolved by a large-hearted Los Angeles woman may soon lead to the supplying of a long-felt want.

Mrs. J. A. Biddison of No. 1655 West Twentieth street is planning to establish a mountain home for boys in the sparsely-settled district of Bouquet Cañon, in Los Angeles county.

Boys whose parents find it hard to manage them amidst the allurements of the city may here find a safe retreat at a nominal cost, the price being put very low so that the real object of the home, the giving a chance to the little street waifs, may be carried out. A manager has been selected for the home and several boys will be ready to go there this week.

One of the main inducements to this enterprise was found in the fact that Miss Frank, connected with the Parental School in Los Angeles since it was first started, has accepted the position of teacher in the district school in this cañon. There are few children in attendance and the chance to remove boys to the beautiful quiet country life and at the same time to put them under the experienced care of Miss Frank in the school, proved a powerful attraction to the good lady who has long desired some such place where the boys who are so often brought to her notice might be given a better chance to develop.

Several influential people are interested in Mrs. Biddison's mountain home plan as they feel that many boys could be given proper and wholesome life and control under such circumstances who would otherwise inevitably land in the detention home.

COAST TO TOPOLOBAMPO.

Los Angeles Man Undertaking Novel Colonization Scheme That Savors of Danger.

William C. Page, of No. 142 West Fifth street, is trying to interest several of his friends in the novel undertaking of building a barge or scow in which it is their intention to coast along close to land all the way from San Pedro to the port of Topolobampo, Mexico.

Although advised that the project is a risky one, Page insists that if they keep close to land there is not likely to be any great danger. A sail will be rigged up, and they will take things easy on the trip down.

The promoter of this unique colonization scheme formerly lived for a number of years in the State of Sinaloa, and is now possessed of a desire to get back there and engage in farming. He is attempting to arouse the enthusiasm of several friends and their families to the point of making the venture, but as the trip in the scow is likely to take anywhere from thirty to ninety days, his prospective associates have thus far shown no feverish haste to pile their household effects and families into the barge with Page. They think that when it comes to a pinch walking might prove surer and more interesting, although perhaps more fatiguing.

WHERE IS MILLER?

Lodging-houses to be Searched for Man Who Came Here a Week Ago and Disappeared.

The police have been notified of the disappearance of William F. Miller on Sunday last from the grading camp of Stansbury & Powell, located near the ocean front between Playa del Rey and Redondo.

A search in the lodging-houses of Los Angeles will be made for the man, who is supposed to have come here Sunday morning. To his associates he stated his intention of returning in the afternoon, but no word has been received from him during the past week. In his visits to Los Angeles, Miller has generally stopped with a private family on East Fifth street, exact residence not known.

Miller is an unmarried German, 42 years old, and 5 ft. 7 in. tall. He has a sandy mustache, and dark brown hair, somewhat gray. At the time of his disappearance he wore a black sack coat, and a black vest. He is described as being a man of excellent habits, and no reason for his sudden disappearance is known. He had some money with him when he departed from the camp.

Any information of his whereabouts should be reported to the police department or Lew Strohm, city, telephone, Main 159.

To those who have not as yet inspected our splendidly equipped building, we can say that this alone, in the fittings and furnishings—designed by our Mr. A. W. Harris, and executed in the work entirely by our own artisans—is well worth a visit, it being the most perfectly appointed in America devoted to this line of business. We shall also be glad to have you make the acquantance of the men who have been with us for so many years—or to renew it—as the case may be. And last, to enjoy the music and the floral decorations.

After paying duty and standing the loss and expense of repacking in boxes, the values are too small to allow sufficient margin. Repacked barrels are quoted at $4.25 to $4.00. The market is not active, nor is demand strong. Some importers are becoming discouraged, and will, it is said, stop importing as soon as Floridas begin to arrive with any degree of freedom.

The first oranges for tae season have reached this market. The quantity which has come forward is not large, but there has been a fair degree of interest, and sales have been at a good price, considering the quality of all first arrivals.

Quotations from store range from $3 to $1.50, the latter price for the poorest fruit that comes, so poor that it might better have been left on the trees or have been fed to the pigs before shipping. If the value of the oranges on the trees, orchard run, is from $1 to $1.25, it is clearly a loss to send fruit there that will not bring more than $1.50, after all expenses of picking, packing and shipping have been added.

THE FLORIDA CROP.

Recent reports from Florida indicate a crop approximatnig 1,500,000 boxes. Some set it as low as 1,300,000 boxes, while others say that it will run nearer 1,750,000. Probably both these figures are extreme. If the output goes beyond 1,800,000 boxes it will be more than the conservative interests think is possible. Last year the crop approximated 2,000,000 boxes. And they all came with a rush. By the holidays, when business ought to have been the best, the crop was ended, and nothing was obtainable excepting Californias. It is probable that to this favorable condition was due in large measure the advantageous prices which Californias brought all last season. With neither Floridas, Jamaicas or Porto Ricos for competitors the market was left free for Californias.

Comice pears are coming from California now in increasing quantities. One car received during the past week sold for $3000. The Comice pear is considered by many consumers as the very best that comes to this market. It is large, sweet and juicy when it arrives, which cannot be said of some other sorts which come from there. It has gained great favor with the discriminating trade, and the market has steadily improved. The situation in the pear trade is complicated this season by the shortage in both eastern and western-grown stock. Many New York packers of Bartletts have sold their stock to California canners to assist the latter in filling contracts.

GOOD GRAPE MARKET.

California grape shippers will not have as strong competition from Almeria as they had last year. Late advices from there say that the output for this country will not exceed 400,000 barrels, and may fall below that figure. Last year the output was 500,000 barrels, which naturally created strong competition with California stock. The fruit is in good condition when it arrives, and is selling at fair prices, but it wil not do as well this year as it did last. The California stock that is now coming in is of exceptionally good quality, and sales have been at high prices. The market continues active, with daily sales at relatively high values. Trere has been no serious slump in prices since the California fruit began to come in auction quantities.

Going over the entire market, there has never been a more auspicious opening of a season than now seems destined to favor California. The orange market is the shippers of California. They will have preference in the lemon market. They have the preference in pears. They will have preference all through the season in grapes. It isn't difficult to prophecy what the result of this will be.

COMPARISON.

Have you ever noticed how some cans of evaporated cream separate? If you have, you have also noted that it was not ST. CHARLES. Every can of St. Charles is so thoroughly and perfectly prepared that it is impossible for it to separate. There is no better on the market. Try a can. At your grocers.

COW TALK.

Will Miss Madge Kennedy please send me her address again? I lost it. She won the prize in the ad. contest last month, and I have a check for her here and have lost or misplaced her address. The ad. contest will run again this month, and I want to get some good ads. Remember one thing; pretty lines, pretty figures, and perfect drawings do not always constitute the best ads. It all rests with the idea conveyed. Sometimes a very crude drawing with a few appropriate or spicy words, or a good headline, will make an ad. that turns out a huge success. Try your hand this month. The contest is open for school children only, and they must send me the name of the school they attend, and a label from a can of St. Charles or Silver Cow cream. Now that school has started in earnest, and the first excitement is over with, I should get more drawings than usual. There was a little improvement this week over last, but it should be better. Let me hear from all of you next week.

Somebody ought to write a book about the strange case of Dr. John R. Haynes, Socialist, and John R. Haynes, millionaire skyscraper owner.

No place is sacred from the profane touch of the Socialist. He would turn Los Angeles into an uneasy hell with the same diabolical satisfaction that he would upset Chicago or any of those other towns which are more to his pattern.

If you like to contemplate pictures of splendor, just feast your imagination on the kind of a town Los Angeles will be when all these new buildings now under way or planned, are erected and gracing the sky lines with their majestic proportions.

If we could once eradicate the perversity that afflicts human nature, the battle for the right would soon be won. Everybody knows the right from the wrong, and yet it seems utterly impossible to induce men to keep their hands from being eternally stuck into deviltment.

As far as this town is concerned it has now been fully decided to serve notice on the oil derrick of commerce that it must either work or remove itself from the landscape. And that's no more than right, too. A derrick is not pretty enough to hold its place merely on its looks.

The big talk now among the trade pushers is all about ships. We are not fixed for commerce anywhere near right because we haven't got vessels enough of our own to take care of the business. So, you'll see ships being built by the hundreds from this time on, because when we need a thing we always get it. And you'll see more than lumber schooners crowding San Pedro harbor, if you live very much longer.

France should not be too eager to fight Venezuela. She could in the long run easily get the worst of it. Nature has done a great deal for Venezuela by throwing around her such defenses of mountain and sea as to make it a hard task for any foe to overcome her. Anyhow, if France is aching for a fight she can get all she wants nearer home. There's Germany, and she's ready to oblige her at a moment's notice.

GET TO THE BOTTOM.

Some days ago, referring to the exposures made in New York of the use of money to influence legislation, The Times printed an editorial intended to awaken public attention to the duty of sending men to the Legislature who could not be bribed. We have a lesson close to our own doors in the conviction of Senator Emmons.

At the time that the article appeared a prominent citizen wrote a letter to The Times commending the publication as to the point. The writer of the letter gave this journal too much credit on one point. He said its utterances had "gone to the root of the subject." There is one step more to be taken to get to the very bottom of the difficulty of sending honest men to State legislatures, to Congress, and in fact to fill every office of public trust.

What was asked on this former occasion was that every voter take the interest he should take in politics, that he should begin at the very beginning and never tire in his efforts until every unworthy aspirant to public office had been defeated and an honest one put in office. What is asked now is that a man like the writer of the letter referred to above permit his name to be offered as a candidate for office. The mass of the voters may strive as they will to select fit men for public office, but unless there is more patriotism on the part of business men than appears at the moment, these efforts will be in vain. Unless the right kind of men will consent to stand, conditions will be as they are. With the best of intentions and with the utmost activity from beginning to end of the campaign, it will still be a case of taking the less of two evils, that is the less objectionable of two throughly objectionable candidates.

Patriotism needs a great revival among us. The office may seek the man until the crack of doom, but if the right man still turns a deaf ear to the call, the men who are not fit to hold office will still hold all the offices. No doubt a desire to shun notoriety, a fear of defeat and other minor considerations keep many good citizens from standing for office. But the real reason in most cases is lack of patriotism. No doubt an office which is a luscious plum to the poor, incapable apology for a man who so often seeks office, would call for great sacrifice for the capable men of business to accept. As for the capable rascal, he can make ends meet by the very means we all deplore. But how keep the "singed cat" of a nobody, and the "Bengal tiger" of a "grafter" both out of office if no capable and honest man can be found to forego his personal gain in business in order to serve the State in an important office.

It may seem as if the remedy would be found in increasing the salaries attached to office holding. It might result in some improvement but it would not lead to radical elimination of the difficulty. No salary would equal the "opportunity" of the "grafter" to do "business." It would be difficult to pay salaries high enough to justify the capable man to give up his business as a business propositon to go into office. If our public offices are ever to be filled with men at once capable and honest it will be by such men serving the State from a sense of duty, in a spirit of high patriotism. One has only to stop and carefully consider the facts as he knows them to see how true these statements are. Politics requires time and attention. From the ledger point of view it hardly ever pays the capable and honest man to devote his time to it. The "singed cat," who can never get on a foot in the business world, seeks it as a means to escape work.

The "Bengal tiger" seeks it as a path which leads inevitably to fortune. The capable business man must tread this path at a loss. Until he will suffer this loss for the good of the public the offices will be in the hands of the "singed cats" and "Bengal tigers."

Now we are at the very foundations of this important question. When the general mass of honest voters will spare enough time from their business, their clubs, their amusements and their families to wrest political management out of the hands of the "machine" and to relegate the political "boss" to the hindmost seat in the hall, and when successful business men will consent to forego making money for a while and hold office as a duty they owe the State, then "grafts" in politics will die and incompetents will have to earn a living as street sweepers rather than sit in the way of temptation in public office.

Is it worth while? That is just the question for each man to answer. Is money-making the only object, or the chief object a man should have before his eyes? If so, then we must be content to see corrupt "grafters" and corporation tools hold office. But if he value the welfare of the commonweath, and the honor of our country and State, he will hold office as a public trust and be content with less success in business. The man who goes into battle to suffer for his country holds a place of high honor in the minds of his fellow-men. So would the one who gives up his opportunities to amass wealth that he may perform a public service with integrity and ability. There are many grades in the public service. The top rounds of the ladder command more esteem than money does. John Hay began his public career low down on the ladder. He went step by step to very near the top. Whose fame stands higher today, that of John Hay, the idol of his country, or that of John D. Rockefeller, whose great wealth is suspected of being "tainted"?

Patriotism does pay.

A HORTICULTURIST'S PARADISE.

If the horticulturists of Southern California, who sometimes complain that they are unable to find a profitable market for their products, could only get something like the prices obtained during the winter months in the leading markets of Europe, they would soon be millionaires. For instance, in the early spring months in London, potatoes are quoted at about 25 cents per pound, lima beans at 35 cents, and French beans at 50 cents. They generally come, at that time of the year, from the Channel Islands, where the climate is much milder than on the mainland of England. Asparagus, about that time, sells at the modest price of $8 to $10 a bunch. A few strawberries are offered at the high-class fruit stands, in the neighborhood of Regent street, as early as the month of February, when they may have come down in price to the trifle of $5 a pound. Exceptionally fine ones, however, of large size, cost as high as $10 per pound, or 50 cents apiece. These are raised in the hothouses of private residences, in the southern counties of England.

It is not every one in England, however, who can afford to indulge in these luxuries, as may be realized from a report of the British Board of Trade on the wages, earnings and conditions of employment of agricultural laborers in the United Kingdom. It shows that an average English laborer, his wife and four children, live for a week on $3.40. In some parts of Ireland the wage scale is much lower than this, being only a little over $2. The highest average quoted in any of the English or Scotch counties is $5.50. Evidently these people don't have much money to spare for strawberries at 50 cents apiece.

DYSPEPTIC JOURNALISM.

We all like to hear people praise their own town or village, their own country, their own State, as being the best each in its respective category. This sub-patriotism makes for patriotism in the fullest meaning of the word, for pride of home, pride of the one particular spot an individual chances to know best, merges insensibly into the still grander pride of country—pride for the flag that guards the home and the dear ones beneath its sheltering roof-tree. It is therefore matter for profound satisfaction for the American who travels widely over the United States to find everywhere a "God's own country"—a God's own country at least in local esteem and in the profound conviction of those who speak the words. Let that profound conviction never be disturbed—it is sacrilege to touch it. The visitor may think he knows a place where the skies are brighter, the climate is balmier, the soil richer, where in general the things that make life best worth living are more bountifully provided. But when he speaks of these things let him duly respect the local attachments of the other man, remembering always that sentiment plays a large part in the making of a "God's own country"—that the fond associations of home, the comradeship of good friends, pleasant meetings with acquaintances, business interests, the daily task well done that is after all life's greatest joy, count more than do mere physical surroundings in making for each of our hearts its own particular earthly paradise.

In this spirit a man may extol his own home-place without offense to any one. He speaks his own convictions while freely admitting that other people may have just as well-founded convictions, each in regard to the particular spot on earth where providence has placed him. Comparisons are proverbially odious; in this matter of mingled fact and sentiment the odium of comparison may gracefully be avoided altogether. But if in the contrary spirit a man, in praising his own locality, takes to abusing that of his neighbors, the breach of good manners is as unpardonable as the lack of logical discrimination.

The above remarks are prompted by a recent article in the Fresno Republican which seeks to belittle Southern California to the greater glory of Northern California. In passing, it may be remarked that the paper referred to is really befouling its own nest, for if a hard and fast geographical line is to be drawn across the fair State of California, Fresno will be found on its southern side. However, no sensible man and no real lover of California wishes to set up such a purely artificial division, and if the heart of this particular Fresno editor turns in yearning towards the north rather than towards the south no one need gainsay him the right to express his preference. But what shall be said of his reasoning powers when, after specifically citing as belonging to the north, the city of San Francisco, the tourist-frequented groves of big trees, the Yosemite Valley, and the two great universities, he proceeds to say that the fame of these things was fully established "while yet the southern corner of the State was an undeveloped, neglected and almost unknown section of the desert."

To such an indictment, waiving its historical inaccuracy, Southern California may plead guilty with a smile of complacency. Is our rapid and phenomenal growth to be made a cause of reproach? Because other districts in California have lagged behind us in the race for population, wealth and world-wide fame, are we to feel ashamed because of the fact? If the full measure of our attractions and commercial possibilites has come to be appreciated only within comparatively recent years, why aim a shaft at us on that account? We do not sneer at a brilliant orator because he was once a lisping child. We rather glory that such grand eloquence has come from such small beginnings. It is what a man is, and what a place is, that makes man or place of present count.

But to analyze such a pitifully small line of argument as that followed by this Fresno scribe is the merest waste of space. The Los Angeles Times has every reason to know that, in this particular matter at all events, the local journal does not voice local sentiment. The growth of Los Angeles means much for the whole middle belt of the fertile San Joaquin Valley, for Fresno county as well as for Kings and Tulare counties adjoining it on the south. The farmers in that region are finding an ever-expanding market in the southern part of the State for their varied products. Capital of Los Angeles citizens is helping largely to develop the industries of a rich region of intensive cultivation. The prosperity of all of us is identical. Therefore, this "southern corner," so far from falling into abuse of its neighbors, rejoices in the good times they are enjoying, and wishes them Godspeed in going ahead.

AMERICAN AND OTHER HUSBANDS.

A short time ago the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, conceding the antipathy felt by most women toward the use of the word "obey" in the marriage service, ordered the substitution of "keep" in the ritual. So, instead of having to promise to obey her husband, she now has promised to keep him. Quite a difference, as may readily be admitted! It is doubtful whether many of the fair brides will take this any more seriously than the former phrase. If they did it would certainly mark quite a revolution in social life. Commenting upon this change, and upon marriage in general, Collier's Weekly says:

"In marriage services which admit of alteration, the word 'obey' is said to be omitted now more often than it is used. Presumably the lead is taken in this change by that country in which woman's individuality is most freely recognized. The lead in the United States is as likely to be taken by one partner as the other. The American man tends toward reason and good humor. For him to wear, in the affairs of every day, that autocratic and solemn demeanor which an English husband not infrequently exhibits, would be forbidden by his conception of the ridiculous. The boorishness of the German and the artificial decorum of the Parisian are equally distasteful to him. This may sound like the eagle's scream, but we really believe that marriage relations in this country permit a little boasting. The disappearance of the word 'obey' comes a long time after the disappearance of the fact. Neither will be regretted."

It may be conceded that it is just possible that the New York weekly is a little too emphatic in its praise of American husbands. No one nation possesses all the virtues—or all the vices—either in this, or in any other phase of life. The good points of the American husband, we American husbands will grant, of course. He (the A. H.) is kind and indulgent—some foreigners think over-indulgent—to the partner of his joys and sorrows, as a rule liberal, if not extravagant, in furnishing her with necessaries and luxuries, sometimes bankrupting himself in the effort to do so, or perhaps driving himself to the insane asylum or the suicide's grave. All this the American wife is accustomed to take as a matter of course.

On the other hand, there is something to be said for the European husband. The Englishman and the German husbands may not practice so many little politenesses toward their wives, they may not open so liberally the strings of their purses, they may occasionally be as Collier's says "autocratic and solemn" in the case of the Englishman or even occasionally "boorish" in the case of the German—although that will usually be merely a surface indication—but on the other hand it is claimed that there is far more of the real home life in England and Germany than there is in this country.

Again, in England and Germany, it is argued, the husband takes his full share, if not more than his share, in the raising of the children. Here in the United States the husband usually thinks he has done his full duty if he supplies his wife with plenty of money to spend on dress and "have a good time," leaving him free to devote the greater part of his leisure to his club or his business interests.

Also, it may be noted that divorces in this country, in proportion to marriages, are about ten times as numerous as they are in England and Germany. If the American husband is such a paragon, how, then, do you account for this?

Therefore, it may be admitted that American husbands have no monopoly of good qualities. But, brethren, let us aim to beat the world!

In a communication to The Times, published Friday, J. W. Eddy, proprietor of the Angels' Flight, raised the question of possible obliteration of that incline-railway system by the proposed building of the Public Library on the lofty site at Third and Olive streets. The suggested building would not interfere with the Angels' Flight. There is ample room for the library without touching Col. Eddy's railway. The proposed elevator would enter the library building and would come within the province of privileges reserved by the city.

CALIFORNIA SUNSHINE.

BY ROBERTUS LOVE.

THE LAND OF PLENTY TIME.

Ho, the Land of Plenty Time!
'Tis a realm of lilting rhyme,
  'Tis a place of peace and plenty
In a soft and sunny clime.

There the sunlight ever gleams,
And the lily scent of dreams
  Gives a hint of bud and blossom
By the marge of shining streams.

There the golden rivers run
Unperplexed beneath the sun,
  And the afternoon is always
And the day is never done.

In the Land of Plenty Time
There is neither care nor crime,
  But the bells of joyance tinkle
In a mild and merry chime.

'Tis a land of dancing feet
That have never known retreat;
  'Tis a glory-time o' triumph,
Never marred by mad defeat.

'Tis the home of hearts that feel
Love's unselfish commonweal,
  And it never knows the clamor
And the clash of steel on steel.

There the verdant pines and palms
Wave in never-broken calms,
  And the airs of summer Southland
Sing to them in endless psalms.

Ah, this land we may not know
Any more, alas! for, oh,
  Love, the Land of Plenty Time
Is the Land of Long Ago!

NOTHING NEW.

Inquisitive Albert: Anything new in the papers today?

Constant Reader: No; seems to be a mighty dull day for news.

Constant Reader (yawning:) Oh, that's nothing; merely another announcement of Miss Roosevelt's engagement, qualified by the statement that the item is printed "on good authority."

HISTORICALLY CORRECT.

"Professor," said the student at the University of New York, "don't you think it is a shame that Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun have been rejected as candidates for our Hall of Fame?"

"Not at all, young man," replied the professor of history. "Do you want us to put statues in this hall that will go after each other with hammers and litter the floor with cracked marble?"

ONE SECRET OF LONGEVITY.

All the regular boarders and a tourist or two were gathered at the dinner table in the Lost Angels Hotel on Spring street. The Star Boarder, as usual, began the conversation.

"Did it ever occur to you," he inquired, "to consider the fact that leading woman suffragists, as a rule, live to be very old women? There is Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, for instance, and there is Miss Susan B. Anthony. Both are away up in the '80s. What do you suppose accounts for it?"

"Really," said the Table Idiot, "I never thought anything about it."

"Of course not," the Star Boarder blurted; "but it's a fact, and I'd like to know why."

The Timid Tourist was seen to fidget in his chair. After two or three ahems he managed to remark:

"I think I can tell you why it is that women suffragists refuse to die."

"Ah! pray enlighten us," pleaded the Star Boarder.

"It is because they have known all along what the eastern clergymen have just discovered, to wit, that there are no lady angels in heaven."

ON THE DUSTY ROAD.

Fatigued Philip: Say, Tom, if you wus to have the chance o' bein' born agin, what would you be?

Tired Tom (meditatively:) If I had th' chance t' be born agin, what would I be?

Fatigued Phil: Yep.

Tired Tom: Well, I dunno; mebbe I'd be a poodle pup belongin' t' some lady o' quality—then I'd git plenty t' eat.

Fatigued Phil: Huh! You ain't up ter date. If I wuz to be born agin an' had me choice, I'd put meself on easy street for life by bein' the second cousin of a president of a life insurance company.

THE CHILDLESS.

When the green tide of summer flows,
She waits beside the frail pink rose,
And looks with eyes of Paradise
On the dear world that childhood knows.

The evening lilies, pale and sweet,
Stay for an hour her little feet;
Wistful she stands with pleading hands,
Hands that my lips so yearn to greet.

When the white blooms of winter fall,
She lingers by the garden wall,
So small and still in the gray chill—
O child, could you but hear my call!

When the great night falls full and deep,
And all home-children lie asleep,
Could she but rest upon my breast—
O child, what wondrous watch I'd keep.

HEMERY WINS AUTO RACE.

Heath Finishes Second and Tracy Third.

Winner Scorched at Seventy Miles an Hour.

Foxhall Keene Crashes Into Telephone Pole.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While the Frenchmen shouted and cried, and the Americans bit their lips with disappointment, August Hemery, driver of the eighty-horse-power Darracq car, won the race for the W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., cup over the Long Island course today, after one of the most sensational speed contests ever held.

Hemery, who had climbed up from fourth place in the race to the leadership at the finish, made the remarkable time of four hours, thirty-six minutes and eight seconds for the total of 283 miles of the course. At times he went at the terrific speed of seventy miles an hour and narrowly escaped several smashes on the route, that was fraught with danger at every turn. He defeated Heath, the other representative of France, who was striving for first place over Lancia, the Italian, and when the latter was practically put out of the race by a bad accident near the finish, Heath swept past him and seemed sure of winning the great contest.

It was then that Hemery, the French driver, pressed so hard that the American had to take second place at the close of the contest, and then Tracy, the other American contestant, took third place over Lancia, who finished fourth.

KEENE HAS ACCIDENT.

While going at the terrific speed of eighty miles an hour, Foxhall Keene, in his 120-horse power Mercedes, crashed into a telephone pole in Willis avenue, between Albertsons and Lakeville, smashing his machine, but he himself and his mechanic escaped all injury. Mr. Keene, who was second in the race at that point, was put out of the race permanently by the accident. At this point of the road a clump of trees form, with the telephone and telegraph poles, the most dangerous obstruction to the racing cars. The road is narrow at this point, and the slightest swerve means to crash into the poles and trees on either side of the road.

INDIANS' VICTORY.
CO. F BADLY BEATEN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] By a score of 88 to 0 the Sherman Indians swept Co. F football team off the field today. Notwithstanding the terrible drubbing, Co. F is unanimous in saying that the Indians play the whitest football of any team on the Coast. The Indians were like a whirlwind. They started in with a touchdown on Co. F's kickoff and the game wound up with the three goals from touchdowns and another from the field in the last five minutes. Tortes kicked the goal from the field.

Co. F played bravely, but they were simply not in it with Hempel's speedy braves. The Indians bucked the line for 10 yards at a time; went round the ends for 60 yards and played with the city team as though they were babies. It was all speed. If any team expects to shut the Indians out this year, they will have to hobble the braves. The game was of two halves of twenty and fifteen minutes. The Indians averaged a goal every three minutes of the play. The line-up was as follows:

Sherman Indians		Co. F.
H. Coleman	left guard	Emmons
C. Coleman	center	Lichtwerk
Blacktooth	right guard	Schurer Schneider
Lubo	right tackle	McMahon
Scholder (C.)	right end	Bailey
Chas. Coleman	quarterback	Wilson Croft
McGee	fullback	Rose (C.) Willett
Tortes	right half	Ferguson Anderson

The Indians played as subs Fulwilder, tackle; Whipple, guard; Bullock, quarter; Lupe Lugo, fullback, and Baldy, end. The soldier boy subs were Schneider, Brown and Fisher.

SHOT PUTTER COMES.
WANTS HIGHEST HONORS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dennis Horgan, the champion shot-putter of the British Isles, who formerly held the world's record with the 16-pound shot, has arrived in New York, and will stay in this country indefinitely. When seen at the Pastime Athletic Club he stated that the object of his visit was to win back the world's record, which Ralph Rose and Wesley Coe have wrested from him during the last year. Horgan's record of 48 feet 2 inches stood a number of years, and was considered unbeatable until Rose, the California boy, sent the iron ball an unheard of distance of 48 feet 7½ inches. The Irishman's pride was further humbled last August, when W. W. Coe of Somerville, Mass., set the mark up to 49 feet 6 inches. When Horgan read of this he made arrangements to come to America and stay until he had retrieved his lost laurels. Horgan's last visit to this country was in 1900, when he easily won the American shot-putting championship.

HARVARD WINS.
HARD FOUGHT GAME.

Harvard 8, Pasadena High School 0.

One of the grittiest football games of the season was played yesterday afternoon on the Harvard School campus between the Harvard Military School eleven and the Pasadena High School team.

Harvard won by hard line bucking, but every inch of ground was stubbornly contested by the lads from Pasadena, who had evidently come to town to win.

The first half resulted 6 to 0, in favor of Harvard, who in order to cross their opponent's goal, were forced to adopt a close formation.

There were no sensational runs during the game, but in the second half the play opened up with a good exhibition of punting.

Pasadena was weak on offensive play, and failed to gain any great advantage when given the ball. The boys were strong in defensive work and allowed few openings.

Both teams were penalized for off side playing, the home team losing the most ground for this offense.

Near the end of the second half, the crowd was given a pretty exhibition of football when the pigskin was punted in a corkscrew curve far down the field by Ball of Harvard. Little of Pasadena missed the catch and the ball went bouncing over the goal line. Gibbs of Pasadena grabbed the ball and tried to repair the damage with a quick run. He was downed behind his own goal line by a neat tackle and two points were added to Harvard's score by the safety thus gained.

The line up:

Harvard		Pasadena
Darling	right guard	Lee
Coulter	right tackle	Ross
Okey	rear end	Wheeler
Zuill	center	Patterson
W. Cline	quarterback	Little
Keating	right half	Crawford
H. Cline	left half	Patton
Ball	fullback	Blick

The officials were: Frank Boren, referee; W. A. Ellis, umpire. The halves were twenty minutes each.

COURSING RACES.
THREE STAKES ON CARD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A champion stake of twelve entries, a reserve of thirty-two and an open of forty-four, make up the card for tomorrow. One round of the open stake was run today, leaving twenty-two dogs in this stake for tomorrow. The champion and reserve stakes are made up of the best dogs in their respective classes, and it is needless to say the many spectators will be furnished with an excellent days' sport. The management has succeeded in matching the two notable performers, Sacramento Boy and Homer Boy. They will meet next Sunday, October 22, for a purse of $250. The winner will have to raise the flag in three trials out of five. No two dogs are better known to followers of the leash than these two grand greyhounds.

A large delegation will be on hand from Sacramento to witness this trial for supremacy.

GIANTS WIN BALL HONORS.

Shut Out Philadelphia in the Final Game.

Christy Mathewson Was the Cause of It.

Large and Enthusiastic Crowd Sees Contest.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

POLO GROUND, NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All hail to the conquerors, the Giants. They won the game 2 to 0. Who won? Mathewson won.

The Giants took the fifth game of the world's series from the Athletics and the fifth game carried with it the baseball championship of the world. Mathewson's pitching did it. Bender was great. The mighty chief had on his war paint, but he gave two bases on balls at the wrong time and that hurt his team. His team played an errorless game. Mathewson allowed six hits and Bender five, but Bender was wild at the wrong time. It was the fourth shut-out for the Athletics, who in thirty-six innings failed to score. Great are the Giants, but greater is "Christy."

About thirty thousand fans saw the game. At 1:30 o'clock both bleacher stands were packed and jammed to suffocation and the crowd was beginning to stand around the center of the field boundary ropes. There was not a seat to be had in the lower section of the big pavilion and in the upper section most of the reserved seats had been taken. A band helped enliven the preliminary practice, which was as brisk and snappy as any one could wish to see.

BRITT AMBITIOUS.
WANTS NELSON AGAIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Jimmy Britt appears to be drawing bigger houses than Battling Nelson did in Denver. Britt writes as follows to a friend in this city: "I have been drawing bigger houses than Nelson since leaving Frisco, and seem to be more popular in defeat than I ever was in victory. I played a week in Salt Lake and was treated fine by both press and public. My boxing partner failed to show up one night, and instead of boxing I did my monologue. It was a great success, and now I am compelled to do it wherever I show. I arrived in Denver Sunday morning, and was met at the depot by Otto Floto and Battling Nelson. That afternoon I opened the biggest house in the history of the theater. Had I beaten Jeffries in a punch it could not have been better. Had a talk with Nelson in which I told him I thought I was his master, and that I wanted the first chance at him. He said he would fight me again as soon as he finished his engagement. I still think I can beat him."

HYLAS FIRST.
WINS RICH STAKE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.'s, Hylas, the 8 to 5 favorite, won the champion steeplechase in the presence of 25,000 persons at Belmont Park today. T. P. Phelan's Ben Crockett, paying 2 to 1 for the place, was second and Mr. Cotton's Jimmy Lane third. The Champion steeplechase is one of the richest events of its kind in the East, the winner receiving a little over $10,000 in adition to a $500 plate. A splendid field of timber-toppers faced the starter for this event, which is over the trying journey of three and a half miles. Results:

Six furlongs: Penrhyn won, Arkilrta second, Lancastrian third; time 1:12 2-5.

The champion steeplechase, about three miles and a half: Hylas won, Ben Crockett second, Jimmy Lane third; time 6:57.

GOLF HONORS.
PAULINE MACKAY WINS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The final contest for the women's national golf championship began today between Miss Margaret Curtis and Miss Pauline Mackay at the Norris country links at Covent Station, N. J. Miss Curtis represents the Essex Country Club of Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., and Miss Mackay the Oakley Country Club of Watertown, Mass.

Weather conditions were excellent. Miss Curtis was the favorite because of the low scores which she has been making over the course in the preliminary rounds.

Miss Pauline Mackay won the woman's national golf championship, defeating Miss Margaret Curtis by 1 up in 18 holes.

BETTER LUCK ALONG BEACHES.

FISHERMEN FINDING SPORT AT ALL THE RESORTS.

Halibut, Croakers, Surf Fish, Sea Trout, Bass, Yellowtail and Yellowfins Taking Hold at the Various Vantage Points—Jack Smelts Quit Biting for a Time.

Fishermen have been having all kinds of sport during the week which closed yesterday.

Croakers, halibut, yellowfins, yellowtail and bass were the piscatorial programme. At most of the beaches some kind of fish was running well enough to afford good sport.

San Pedro Bay produced a number of croakers and a few yellowfins during the rising tides. Halibut are beginning to bite better as the colder weather comes on, and their flesh is becoming more palatable.

The bass fishing outside is first class, and seems to be growing better all the time. Big yellow-bellies are to be had at the breakwater and at Port Los Angeles.

At the southern resorts some surf fish of fair size are feeding in considerable numbers. West Newport and Huntington Beach, are both good points for fishermen's research.

The yellowtail at Newport are biting with considerable regularity and one can almost depend on going out on the wharf and getting at least one "strike" of a good-sized one. Some weighing thirty-five pounds have been seen—and lost through broken gear.

At Redondo mackerel, yellowtail and halibut are the prevailing game with occasional sea trout thrown in for variety.

Manhattan fishing is quiet, and there is little doing at Hermosa, though some anglers report good sport casting off the beach for yellowfins.

Hyperion, ill-smelling place of the sewer wharf, is little frequented nowadays, the difficulties of fishing there being such as to deter most anglers. Halibut bite there at times, and occasionally yellowtail run past the pier head.

Jack smelts are plentiful, but they are not biting very well at present.

BUSH LEAGUE.
NEW ONE TALKED.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 14.—Again the formation of a bush baseball league has sprung up, and is being agitated in several of the cities of the southern part of the State. Manager Van Dervort of this city has been receiving communications from influential baseball men of Los Angeles and other cities in regard to joining the league with his Channel City team, and he has expressed a willingness to be one of them.

A similar league, which embraced the larger and smaller cities of the southern part of the State was started two years ago, but it died after a series of winter games and squabbles. The whole organization was one big fight from start to finish, but while it lasted it was interesting to ball players and fans alike. It is said that the plans now being made on the quiet are more stable and far-reaching than those launched two years ago, and if carried into action, will put a number of minor ball teams into a series of games that will interest the residents of every town and hamlet in Southern California. Santa Barbara now has a strong team in constant practice, and will be out after the pennant when it is unfurled to the breeze.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Columbia football men were thrown into a panic when it was learned this week that Capt. Thomas J. Thorpe, Douglass Carter and W. M. Starbuck were declared out of football for the season. With these men out of the game, Columbia fears greatly the outcome of not only the game with the members of the "big four," but also those with the smaller elevens. Thorpe has been dropped from college, while Carter has been declared ineligible for an indefinite period, and Starbuck during the present academic year. The men under the ban were all matriculated in the school of mines, where a specially high standard of scholarship must be preserved, and it was owing to their failure to keep up to it that they got into trouble with Dean Sever. It was rumored for some time that Thorpe was in difficulty on account of his scholarship, but it was not thought such drastic action would be taken. He entered college three years ago, and in his first two years stood very well, having only one condition. Last year he was injured playing football so that his eyes were affected, and consequently he had to refrain from study. Carter understood he could become eligible by working off one condition, and took the examination for it yesterday, only to learn later that he was debarred from athletics because he had failed to advance with his class.

The greatest surprise, however, was the case of Starbuck, which had been passed on earlier in the season, so that he was allowed to play in the earlier games, having been declared eligible by the regular committee. One of the professors in the school of mines stated that there were eight more ball players who were under consideration for the same treatment that was accorded to the three disqualified, and that absolutely no favor would be shown to a man merely because he was an athlete.

Thorpe would probably have been the greatest tackle playing the game this fall, and it will be practically impossible to fill his place. Carter and Starbuck were among the best candidates for the position of fullback, the former being an especially good punter. In the almost impossible schedule that the blue and white is attempting this year, the chance for anything like success is unlooked for by the students with these men out of the game.

HARVARD WINS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CAMBRIDGE (Mass.) Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] By the score of 11 to 0, Harvard this afternoon defeated the eleven from the Springfield training school. The showing made by Harvard disgusted the coaches. Springfield's strength was a surprise to every-one.

YALE'S EASY VICTORY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Yale skunked Holy Cross on the Yale field this afternoon, scoring herself a safe eighteen points. The visitors, however, outplayed the home team a few minutes during the first half.

PENN'S GAME.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.), Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Pennsylvania scored only 5 points against North Carolina on Franklin field this afternoon. The Southern team's tackling bothered the home players considerably. The final score was Pennsylvania 5, North Carolina 0.

SOLDIERS BEATEN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WEST POINT, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The West Point eleven lost to the Virginia Techs by the embarrassing score of 32 to 6. The Army was weakened by the loss of three of its best players. From the start the Virginia boys had little trouble with the army lines.

PRINCETON'S BIG SCORE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PRINCETON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Tigers rolled up a score of 45 to 0 against Bucknell College eleven here today. The game was a succession of plunges for gain. Bucknell was too light and mobile to hold the striped players at any point.

COLUMBIA VICTORIOUS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After a hard-fought battle with the pigskin warriors of Williams' College, their old-time enemies on the checkerboard, Columbia this afternoon came off victorious with a score of 11 to 5. Williams' five points came in the second half when Brown, the left half, carried the ball over.

TOURISTS ARRIVE.
LULL'S PARTY ON ROAD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An eight-car automobile party of forty-five Angelenos, guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Lull, arrived here between 6 and 7 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. Lull came in on the last car at 7 o'clock. They are being entertained at the Glenwood Tavern. The trip from Los Angeles was devoid of notable incident. The best time made was three hours and fifty minutes. Tomorrow Mr. and Mrs. Lull have invited Frank A. Miller and sixteen of his friends to join the Angelenos on a tour of the valley.

NO SCORE AT FIESTA PARK.

Los Angeles High School is Great on Defense.

Occidental Forced Back at the Ten-Yard Line.

Harvard Starts With a Win Over Pasadena.

Again outweighed, but in the game from start to finish, Los Angeles High's plucky little team held Occidental College's entire football squad, twenty-three strong, at bay yesterday afternoon for two fifteen-minute halves, in one of the finest football contests that will be seen on any local gridiron this year.

When the two teams lined up, it looked like cruelty to animals to pit the schoolboys against such a tall, husky aggregation of seasoned pigskin knights as sported the black and gold of Occidental. After play had been in progress a few minutes, the pity of it became more fancied than real.

From the first, the pupils of Coach Roesch showed themselves able to take care of themselves on the field without outside sympathy. Occidental's loyal rooters set up a dreadful song of mock commiseration for Los Angeles High's impending defeat of forty to nothing, but after the first half, and especially during the few minutes that succeeded Referee Traeger's giving the ball to Occidental on High School's 10-yard line when the High boys forced back their burly opponents for a loss of 11 yards in two downs, Occidental's bleachers were as quiet as a rat in a new cheese. Nobody had a word to say; the humiliation of Occidental was complete. Colleges are supposed to be merciful to academic teams, and to consider them rather as practice material than as real opponents, but no team which has tackled the High School this year has been able to regard the ensuing match as other than for good, red blood.

In defensive ball, the High School eleven showed phenomenal strength. It held Occidental for downs, actually with regularity; and by a series of well-executed cross-bucks, big Tackle Smith frequently made substantial gains. Occidental's line was nothing of any consequence; the High boys ripped through it much oftener and a great deal easier than any academic aggregation should ever do with college forwards to play against.

When Occidental had the ball, High School put through a perfectly planned and superbly executed style of shifting defense adapted to every formation of the Occidental team. Fullback "Bab" Demens was very effective, and broke up a number of plays, as well as tackling runners with commendable accuracy, seldom failing to down his man in his tracks, however burly the opponent, and some of Occidental's players are "whales."

Occidental did considerable fumbling, and some of those active little fellows in blue seldom failed to fall on the ball before the huskies could get their feet unwrapped.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

The showing of the black and gold was a distinct disappointment to Occidental supporters. St. Vincent's made a better showing against the High School than yesterday's and the Co. F dope must be thrown out as telling nothing, and showing no "line" on the merits of U.S.C. and Occidental.

The men are big; they seem fast enough, but they don't know football, and that is all there is to it. High School yesterday out-tricked them; the Occidental players at times did not seem to know just where their duty lay, and were in the wrong place at the right time. Occidental will have to get a move on if the team hopes to accomplish much this fall.

On present showing the Sherman Indians figure to beat any local team they play not less than fifty to nothing.

Yesterday's was a clean, well played game, though there was one "scrap" which resulted in Beal of Occidental and Holland of High School being "canned" by Referee Traeger, who will permit no roughing, and is never backward with his penalties when they are deserved.

Occidental's line-up changes were incessant; they resulted in alterations for nearly every play. On defense Petty was played forward; on offense brought back.

The play started with the men in the following positions:

The line-up:

High School		Occidentals.
G. Nast	left end	A. Merrill
Young	left tackle	Crane
B. Mitchell	left guard	Von Schriltz
Cass	center	Conrad
Walker	right guard	Petty
Smith	right tackle	Wiesman
M. Mitchell	right end	Hagerman
Holland	quarterback	Spaulding
Goodwin	left half	Northcross
Demens	fullback	B. Clark
W. Nast	right half	B. Merrill

Berryman replaced Holland at quarter and did good work in the position, handling his team well. Occidental's changes beggared following; they came rapidly, as Merrill was trying all his men out. Sanderson, High's star redheaded back from Boston had a chance to show his class, and did some clever work. He goes to the game like a cat to liver, and will some day earn a permanent position.

BOOKIE BUYS HOUSE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George Wheelock, premier bookmaker and president of the "Mets," has just purchased a mansion in East Eighty-sixth street for $150,000. There must be something wrong about this announcement. Every bookmaker has lost heavily this season, according to the stories they tell, and all of them are broke. If this is true, how did Wheelock ever manage to save $150,000 out of the wreck. For an answer apply to "Big Bill" Jackman or Orlando Jones, and inclose stamps for a reply

Some of the Tourists who started yesterday for Riverside.

TOURISTS OFF TO RIVERSIDE.

Automobile Junket of Fine Cars is Started.

Los Angeles Concern Makes Bid for Big Order.

Party Will See Sights, and Return Today.

Quite a stroke of automobile business enterprise was the trip of the Tourist automobile people to Riverside yesterday afternoon in the interest of the popular Los Angeles-made car, which the Auto Vehicle Company is now turning out in a variety of models, two and four-cylinder, calculated to meet the needs of almost every gasoline crank's purse from the most modest to the most elaborate.

Proprietor Miller of the Hotel Glenwood, Riverside's representative hostelry, has for some time been in correspondence with eastern makers relative to buying ten cars for sight-seeing purposes in and around the capital of the Citrus Belt. It was only recently that he became aware of the existence of a factory so close at hand, and at once he communicated with the Tourist people. Being pretty well satisfied that their output would fill the bill, Mr. Miller further desired a demonstration on the home conditions of Riverside; and it was to supply this that yesterday several machines, some owned by the company and others by private parties who think them the best on earth, journeyed to the eastward early in the afternoon, leaving the factory at Tenth and Main streets about 2 o'clock.

Today will be spent in speeding about the beautiful drives of Riverside, seeing the orange groves and other points of interest. The party numbering about twenty-five, is quartered at the Glenwood, and either this afternoon or tomorrow night, the return trip will be made, probably not in company.

Several types of Tourist cars were shown, the big four-cylinder models being present in all their luxuriance of tasty finish and graceful lines. The big cars predominated, as they are thought best suited to the needs of the Riverside sight-seeing business.

Of those who made the trip yesterday were H. L. Percy and wife in his new, and as yet, not even painted four-cylinder car; L. C. Lull and party; S. H. Ellis, H. W. Barlow, W. H. Mooers and George R. Bentel in Bentel's four-cylinder Tourist; William H. Allen and wife, Frank X. Pfaffinger and Mrs. G. W. Lull, in Allen's car; Linford Lull, Dr. T. A. Lancaster, wife and daughters in another big car, and W. H. Holliday, J. H. Ramboz, and Misses Ramboz and Buchter, in Holliday's handsome machine.

NEWSY WHIRLS OF THE AUTOMOBILE'S WHEELS.

ANOTHER agency has been added by the Western Motor Car Co. to a list that already comprises a most extensive and popular line of automobiles.

After considerable negotiations, Earle Anthony, manager of the concern, has closed a deal with the exclusive Packard people whereby their agency, and ten cars out of their limited output have been secured for the coming season. The Packards are very popular among those who think more of automobile quality than of price, and it is related by Mr. Anthony that, although not even a demonstrator has arrived as yet, three of the allotted ten are already contracted for by purchasers.

The Packard factory will make only 600 machines this year. The cars are not rated in horsepower, but are guaranteed to develop from sixty-six to sixty-eight miles on the level roads—not track rating, but roads of such class as yesterday's big Vanderbilt race was run over.

The engine is of four cylinders, water cooled, bevel-geared transmission, jump spark and magneto ignition, control on the steering wheel, and thoroughly up to the minute in every particular.

It is not at all a cheap car, costing $4150 laid down here. The first wagon leaves the factory October 28, and will be used as a demonstrator by the Western Motor Car Company.

Eighteen Packards were sold in San Francisco last year, and thirty are allotted there this season.

The Western Motor Car Company now has the Thomas, Knox, Cadillac, Stevens-Duryea and Packard.

The little 16-20 horsepower 1906 Reo has "busted" another record.

This time it was the much dreaded Box Springs Cañon near Riverside that fell before the steady shots of the little double-opposed engine, J. W. Collinge of Riverside, with a Cape top rig, carrying four passengers up the hard grade on the high gear in just exactly ten minutes for four miles—an average of twenty miles an hour.

Heretofore Box Springs Cañon has been a sort of bogie for automobilists in the citrus belt. Many have been called, but few chosen by good luck to go up it without frequent resorts to the low gear, and many have fallen by the wayside even then.

The performance is vouched for by Mr. Shettler himself, who is an honorable man. Otherwise the documentary evidence would be demanded by Riverside automobilists.

It is said the best previous time in a record attempt was an hour and forty minutes, owing to accidents.

The Reo people will move into their new home at No. 633 South Grand avenue in about fifty days. Shettler reports an average sale of one car per day.

John L. Bradbury, the millionaire silver mine owner of Los Angeles, Cal., and Mazatlan, Mex., well known as an automobile enthusiast of changing tastes and unlimited means, is now about to change his car again.

With Mr. Brabury, the purchase of any automobile that strikes his fancy, or the change from one car to another is of little more moment than the change of a brand of cigars is to the average man.

He is now looking at a Thomas, and has examined and ridden in several other machines, including the Reo. Friday Bradbury went through a smashup, but escaped injury, and yesterday he was afield again.

Ralph Hamlin, local agent of the Franklin, was in at the finish of the Vanderbilt cup race yesterday.

TEDDY'S GOOD TALK. MAY STOP BRUTALITY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The President has won again. He has succeded in getting the football coaches of the "big three" to promise to try and eliminate brutality from the game. That is something the college presidents could not accomplish.

By the way, now that Mr. Roosevelt has taken a hand in the football situation, wouldn't it be a good idea for him to straighten out the boxing tangle for New York State. In the days of the Horton law, when he was a police commissioner, Mr. Roosevelt used to enjoy a good fight, and if by his influence he would open the pugilistic gates in New York, he would add immensely to his popularity.

DOLLY BEATS THE TIGERS.

Allows Fisher's Men but Five Scaly Hits.

Keefe is Touched up for Nine Good Swats.

Feature of Play is Fielding of Looloo Infield.

Los Angeles 3, Tacoma 1.

Helped out by the fine pitching of Dolly Gray and playing practically a perfect fielding game, the Looloos skinned the Tigers yesterday at the ball grounds in a manner that shows that the locals should have but little trouble in winning the second half of the pennant race, if they play such ball for even half the games yet to be played. They hit the ball hard enough to win and fielded it in championship style, a bad throw by Brashear to first base in the opening inning being the only mistake for us and this did not amount to anything in the run line.

Keefe was in the box for the visitors and besides being hit at the right time some of the men behind him didn't give him the best kind of assistance, but with Gray's pitching these Tacoma errors made little difference. Just what the game was can be judged by the fact that Dillon at first had eighteen of the twenty-seven outs, and there were twenty infield assists. It was hard work for the Tigers to get the ball out of the diamond, Nordyke being the only one who could connect with it safely, this one getting three of the five hits.

Besides pitching championship ball Dolly Gray slashed out two doubles, scoring on his first one with the aid of Bernard's swat and with his second one he scored Ross, who opened the fifth inning with a single and advanced on a sacrifice. The third run started on Brashear's single to first, which Nordyke threw wild to Keefe at the bag, Kittie going to second on the throw. He advanced on Dillon's sacrifice and scored on Cravath's long fly to center.

The visitors could do nothing with Dolly until the ninth. Nordyke opened this with a single to right and went to third when Eagan hit in the same place, Nordyke scoring on the double play that McLaughlin hit into. The particular feature of the game was the fielding of the local infield.

The score:

BOMBARDMENT OPENS TODAY.

Quail and Ducks Suffering on Field and Marsh.

Outlook for Sport Conceded to be Very Good.

Takes a Brave Man to Hunt San Fernando Valley.

For once, let it go on record that the shooters, rich and poor, clubman and outside poacher, got a fairer start than ever was sprung on any racetrack when this morning, half an hour before sunrise, the quail and duck season of 1905 legally opened.

Some couldn't wait. It is a reprehensible practice and unjustiable, except [illegible] camp meat contingencies, but reports from the country tributary to Los Angeles have told the gratifying news that on the whole game laws have been better observed this year than ever before, and that the birds show it.

Whether the fall of 1905 will prove a better "duck year" than "quail year" or the verse remains to be demonstrated, as present prospects indicate a good outlook in both branches of shotgun sport.

The duck clubs now total about [illegible], and have brought several thousand more acres under water, furnishing more resting and breeding places for the waterfowl; conveniences that [illegible] evident surely seem to appreciate, for they are more than numerous on all of the marshes which are now full. Some of the clubs were a little late getting down to business, but there is less of a water shortage than at this time last year; the shooting will be better distributed, and the birds will have a better chance. It will be harder to bag the limit, and no sportsman will be likely to regret the change.

Many conservative hunters estimate that there are now more ducks on Southern California marshes than have been noticed in five years at this early [illegible].

Sprigs are generally plentiful early in [illegible], and the present month is no exception.

Far more widgeon are to be seen—and heard—just now than is the rule at the opening shoot, big bands of the handsome birds being transient guests of the Ballona Clubs.

[illegible], gadwell and a few Canada geese have been seen by observant gunners. The new Del Rey Club in the Ballona district has a "mallard [illegible]" in the tules out of which 300 mallards can be scared up almost any time.

"SPOONIES" ARE HERE.

Most years the spoonbills appear here only after the first rains, but there are hundreds of the little scoopers on the Ballona now, picking up a good living. They will hardly be passing by today.

With the exception of the Centinela and its neighbor to the south, the [illegible] preserves are all in good shape. The Recreation has plenty of water from its own forty-inch well, and its supply is augmented by purchase of the Del Rey Club's surplus.

The latter organization looks more like a ten years' fixture than a marsh that was never fired over until this season—that is, as a club. The Del Rey ponds were famous in the days when there were no preserves in this part of the State.

The Santa Monica people also settled their water troubles by way of that [illegible] group of three wells that supply the Del Rey Club's water. In fact everything indicates that the Ballona will retain all of its glory this fall and winter, both for ducks and the duck hunters. All things considered, the Ballona is the best shooting we have—class of birds and conveniences of access considered. Year after year its downfall as a duck marsh has been predicted, but like Los Angeles real estate, it seems to keep forging ahead and growing better rather than worse as civilization comes on. The chief drawback is found in the classic background of Abbot Kinney's Venice, and Clark & [illegible]'s Del Rey. These resorts give the shooting altogether too "citified" a [illegible] to be natural, and many doubtless would rather kill their game amid more rural surroundings. So far as birds are concerned, the fowl will use the Ballona so long as the ponds have water, and the [illegible] Ranch has grain gleanings to [illegible] duck forth o'nights.

Duck shooting is not a thing that can be reduced to a mathematical calculation. The best informed and most experienced hunters often make mistakes in laying out a preserve, particularly when making an "artificial" marsh. Unprepossessing locations often seem to strike the fancy of the birds for reasons that are hidden from human beings; some promising ponds draw nothing but spoonbills and teal, while others far less inviting seem like [illegible] for the sprigs and widgeon with a sprinkling of mallards for [illegible].

There have been some changes [illegible] of note in the clubs that lie along Bolsa and Newport bays, more land having been flooded. Several new organizations are shooting today, and others have bought more land. If the Bolsa people can only get together on their shooting days so that part of the clubs are not driving the birds into rest on the others, the shooting will be materially improved. At present the Bolsa Chica is shooting on days that the rest can not avail themselves of; the result is that when the others are shooting, the birds pile into the Bolsa Chica, and when that organization's open days roll around, the other clubs are resting, and the ducks [illegible] the dose.

DEL REY OPENING.

Yesterday, the Del Rey Club celebrated its opening with a big bulls' head and mutton barbecue. Two special cars were run down from the city direct to the clubhouse, leaving town at 5.50 and about one hundred invited guests took part. There was speechmaking galore and a general outpouring of good cheer and good fellowship.

The Del Rey appointments are ideal in every respect, the only criticism that could be made of the club being that it is too much like a fine hotel; that there is lacking that taste of roughing it which to many sportsmen is the chief charm of duck hunting. With first-class cooks, electric cars to the doors, private rooms, hot and cold water, luxuriously upholstered chairs and a phonograph, "all the comforts of home" are there. It is essentially a [illegible] proposition, and is apparently an exact model of what such a club should be.

[illegible] V. Keller laid out the grounds and attended to the duck shooting features. Chas. A. Winship and Willard [illegible] looked after the house; Winship designed it himself, and served as his own contractor. Seventeen individual [illegible] all outside, and not a penny's choice between them, give a suggestion of the thought that was spent upon the clubhouse, which would cost about $16,000 to replace.

The Del Rey members are, besides the three mentioned, William and J. B. Banning, William and George Bayly, W. G. Kerckhoff, Reese Llewellyn, Irving E. Ingraham, W. T. Gillis, C. Modini Wood, A. R. Maines, Henry G. Weyse and Percy Schumacher. Most of them will be out for the opening hunt today.

WHERE THEY SHOOT.

The Recreationites have a "full house" last night and a full marsh today, with fair shooting.

About three fair blinds are available on the Centinela today, as the club did not start pumping soon enough. In two weeks the Centinela people will be killing as many ducks as anybody.

C. C. LeBas, A. L. Trench and others of the Santa Monica Club are bombarding the high-flyers over that marsh this morning.

M. J. Connell, E. J. Marshall and about fifteen other Bolsa Chicans began promptly on time, and some of them are, doubtless, still at it, picking out a limit of high-class birds.

"Cy" Myrick and a party of friends are trying out the old Alamitos this morning.

Frank Hicks, "Ed." Silent, R. E. Ross, B. E. Green, Nat Myrick and enough others to fill nearly every blind on the place are busy with the Cerritos webfeet, since shortly before sunrise.

Ed. Tufts, F. M. Notman, W. H. Holmes and John Schumacher of the Pacific membership are trying to break last year's record on that marsh this morning.

The quail hunters are overlooking no bets. As soon as the light became good enough to see in the cañons the festive pop of nitro powder began to be heard. Enough gunners to whip a Russian regiment are afield. A bunch of modern barbers concluded last night to try their hand at shaving quail with a shotgun, and left for the San Fernando Valley—a proceeding which stamps them each and all as men of personal bravery. None other than a brave man is game enough to take chance with his life in the valley this morning. Of the party are J. W. Ball, H. C. McCoy, S. M. Blodgett and E. Green.

All the guns in town were rented last night, and verything indicates a turnout of about 500 shooters in the San Fernando tomorrow, counting from Burbank to the tunnel.

who can kill almost her weight in wild cats.

THIS LADY IS SURE ON CATS.

Mrs. Jenkins of Castaic a Quick, Cool Shot.

Bags Biggest Wild Cat With Husband's Gun.

Hen Roost Robber Scaled Twenty-three Pounds.

If these Southern California women don't look a leedle oudt, they'll have the men so scared that no "he" will dare to marry.

What with trapping burglars, holding up amateur "highwaymen" and sending 'em scooting for the tall brush, mauling recalcitrant "hubbies," beating the world at tennis, and indeed, at nearly everything else, they are surely establishing themselves as a most dangerous lot. The latest to qualify for public interest is Mrs. W. W. Jenkins of the Castaic in Northern Los Angeles county, who last month, unaided, with her husband's shotgun, brought down a twenty-three pound wildcat which had been harassing the hen roosts and carrying off occasional meals of bigger game around the Jenkins ranch.

Mrs. Jenkins is not a very large woman, but she is not a bit deficient in nerve, and when she went after his catship, "Tommy" promptly bit the dust. A couple of charges of heavy shot did the business for keeps, and the badly-perforated hide of his feline majesty now adorns the Jenkins mansion.

W. W. Jenkins is well known all through Northern Los Angeles county, being a pioneer in that section. He is a hunter of many years' experience, and counted as a capable marksman in a part of the world where a man's skill with the rifle and revolver still counts for something else than his own amusement.

The Jenkins ranch house is often visited by local hunters who have occasion to pass near it in their rambles, and they are generally sure of a welcome there. Mr. Jenkins has large and valuable holdings in the vicinity, and has selected one of the prettiest places in the whole country for a residence.

The cat killed by Mrs. Jenkins is of the ordinary variety in markings and proportions, but is of most excessive size, as shown by the photograph. It was apparently the patriarch of all the wild cat kind, and might have made a most wicked fight had it not encountered a cool, capable shot, although a woman. Mrs. Jenkins's aim never faltered, and his catship had no chance to spring.

TWO SHOWS.

NEW YORK PROSPECTS.

After a long hesitation, the Automobile Club of America has applied for and obtained a sanction for its show in a New York armory. The show in Madison Square Garden was sanctioned a couple of months ago and the club acted to protect its patrons, so that there will be two sanctioned shows at the same time, in New York, during the week of January 13-20. The Garden show will be known as the Sixth National Automobile Show in Madison Square Garden, while the club will call the one in the armory the Sixth Annual Automobile Exhibition of the Automobile Club of America.

Eddie Bald, who scored an almost unbroken string of victories in hill climbs and track races this year, says that he will surely be in the racing game next season with a machine in which he can "win sitting up and back pedalling."

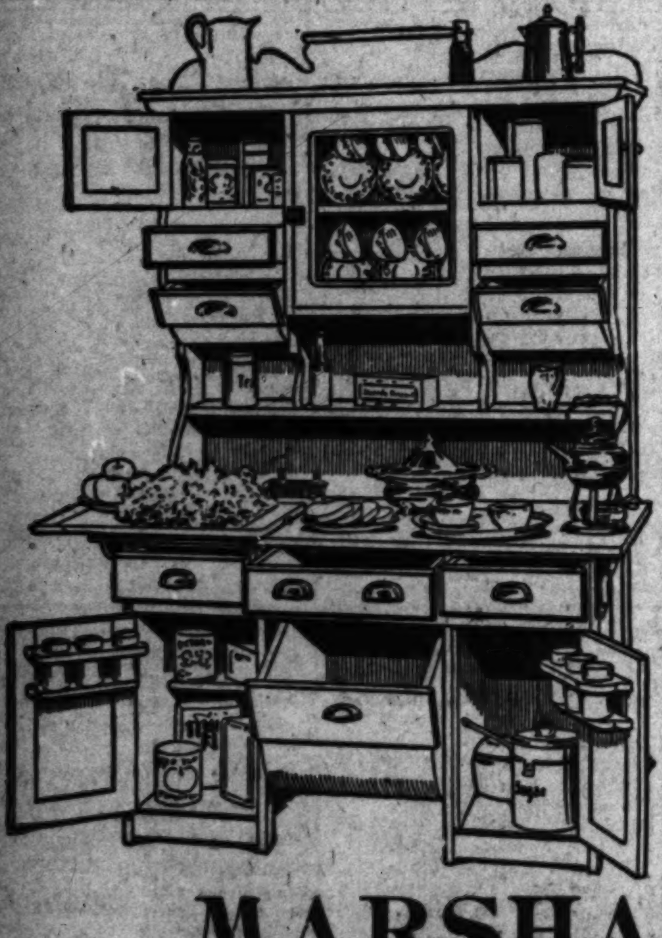
McDougall Kitchen Cabinets

Are Popular With Los Angeles Ladies

The announcement on last Sunday that we had received the complete line of the famous McDougall Kitchen Cabinets (the same as you see advertised in the leading magazines) resulted in our salesrooms being visited during the week by a large number of Los Angeles ladies, whose exclamation of surprise and admiration for this handsome and useful piece of furniture convinced us that the California housewife is quick to grasp the advantages of advanced and practical methods for the lessening of work in the kitchen, whether she herself performs these duties, or oversees the work of a servant. And with the realization that with a McDougall Kitchen Cabinet, the work in the kitchen is reduced to at least one-half of what it formerly was, the progressive housewife will own one of them.



They Cut the Kitchen Work in Half

A McDougall Kitchen Cabinet replaces the old-fashioned kitchen table and has the full-sized working surface of the regular table top with the addition of drop leaves at either end if desired. The space below the table is fully utilized, and so is the space above the table. It has bins for flour, sugar, coffee, tea and salt; cupboards and drawers for other groceries; drawers for cutlery, linen, etc.; a breadboard; a generous shelf; a large table; a china closet with plate racks and cup hooks; besides ample space for all of the cooking dishes.

What a McDougall Cabinet Will Hold

50 pounds of flour
20 pounds of sugar
10 pounds of salt
10 pounds of buckwheat flour
25 pounds of cornmeal
3 pounds of tea
2 pounds of coffee

6 kinds of spices, pepper, sage, celery, salt, other condiments.
1 bottle of vinegar
1 can molasses
12 cans of fruit and vegetables
1 pail of lard

6 boxes breakfast foods
several bottles of olives, sauces, mustard, catsup and salad dressing.
9 piepans, knives, forks, grinding-stone, can-opener, pair of scales and nearly a dozen cooking vessels.

And still there is room, and with the sliding shelves, more table surface than there is with the old kitchen table.

These Cabinets Are Sold on Thirty Days Trial

That we may give the benefit of all doubt to every purchaser of a McDougall Kitchen Cabinet we have arranged with the manufacturers of the same to sell them on 30 days trial—that is, if after you have used the Cabinet for 30 days and are not thoroughly satisfied with it you may return it to us and we will refund the purchase price to you. Is this not a fair proposition?

An invitation is extended to every resident of Los Angeles and surrounding towns and cities to call at either our Los Angeles or San Francisco display rooms and see the fine line of these cabinets which we have on display. It costs you nothing to see them and if you cannot buy, you will no doubt find in them many points whereby you can modify the present arrangement of your kitchen.

Besides the line of McDougall Kitchen Cabinets we will take pleasure in showing you through the model three-room cottage which we have erected on the floor of our display rooms and in which you can see in working order our Patented Wall Beds and Fixtures for Apartment Houses and Cottages.

If not convenient to call, send for a copy of The House Ideal which illustrates and describes in detail the workings and advantages of our patented fixtures.

RACING SHELL EASY FOR HER.

Los Angeles Oarswoman Can Handle One Well.

Cranky Craft Responds Well to Her Efforts.

Miss Melodile Garbutt Able to Give Men Lessons.

Pulling a racing shell without averaging an impromptu plunge bath per five minutes elapsed time is but one degree easier than pulling ulcerated teeth by the primitive lumber-camp method—that is, passing a stout piece of fish line over a pulley, hitching it to a hook in the fangs of the tooth, propping up a log, and letting it fall against the taut string. Of the two games, rowing in one of the featherweight incarnations of aquatic crankiness and unstability that constitute the modern speed machine of the crack oarsman is certainly not the easiest, though those who have experienced both will agree it is the most pleasant.

Such are the difficulties of navigation— "perils of the sea" if you will—to those who essay the ancient sport of rowing in a paper shell that but few of the male pullers essay it. Only the most proficient can even enter one of the fragile affairs without capsizing it, and only then when a strong man is at hand to help. Rather remarkable is it, then, to learn that a slip of a Los Angeles girl, fifteen years old, coached by an old-time crack with the sculls, has succeeded not only in mastering the genelc art of sitting straight, but has also learned that far more difficult accomplishment of pulling her craft at a great speed and with a regularity of stroke that would make a college crew rowing man envious.

Miss Melodile Garbutt of Los Angeles and Playa del Rey, a daughter of the well-known and popular oil magnate and racing automobilist, Frank A. Garbutt, last summer learned of the pleasures of boating on the lagoon at the Clark-Sherman resort, and displayed so keen an interest in it that she attracted the attention of Prof. Wm. Franklin, who in his day had stood all the knights of the spoon blades upon their heads. Mr. Franklin took the young lady athlete in hand, and in a very few lessons had taught her how to get into his shell. Already having taught herself something about rowing, handling the splendidly balanced sculls came natural to the girl, and before long she was shooting across the land-locked bay at Del Rey, a familiar little vision in blue, going by even the plodding old launch that periodically plugs its way up and down the long lane of sand-framed sea that the big tide gates have cut off from the beating breakers outside.

Miss Melodile's next achievement was to win the ladies' boat race in which nine contestants were entered, comprising the crack oarswomen of half a dozen beach resorts. Like the America in that famous international yacht race of nearly fifty years ago—"there was no second."

When one considers that a racing shell such as Prof. Franklin's is built of paper, and weighs only 26 pounds—any man of ordinary strength can "muscle" it out at arm's length—is thirty feet long and ten inches wide with an overhanging cockpit—built in so frail a manner that any misstep means a hole punched through the bottom, and so cranky that the minute one stops pulling or shows the slightest variation of stroke the affair will capsize—the fact becomes apparent that young Miss Garbutt is a rather unusually enterprising young lady.

Notwithstanding the fact that she is, so far as known, the only woman west of Pittsburgh who can scull a shell, Miss Melodile is becomingly modest about her achievements, and never alludes to her prowess except before an admiring daddy and a stalwart young sister who is the wrestling and "savate" champion of the Garbutt family. Miss Theo Garbutt, at fourteen, is quite an accomplished oarswoman, and both the girls can sail a small catboat which their father bought for them—and takes more pleasure out of himself.

The other day Mr. Garbutt, aided by Matt Walsh, coxswain of the Sherman crew, launched the catboat in the surf, and set sail for a spin outside in her, but off Redondo the ground swell got busy with Frank A.'s digestive apparatus, and a "Fish Dinners, twenty-five cents" sign did the rest—but that is another story. And the day Matt Walsh, who claims to be quite an oarsman himself, clambered into Franklin's shell, convinced he could do anything a girl might accomplish—and as promptly fell out—is also another story still, and one that perhaps Matt would rather we didn't tell.

GAME NOTES AND COMMENT.

BY THE SPORTSMAN.

Sportsmen have often wondered where the doves go when they leave about the 1st of August, after hunters have shot them legitimately about two weeks—and illegitimately all summer.

The whereabouts of the birds is a riddle to many, but Game Warden Morgan and Supervisor Patterson not long ago solved it to their own satisfaction, when in half an hour's shooting in Antelope Valley, they bagged about seventy birds—knocked 'em over as fast as they could load and shoot, ably aided by Supervisor Patterson's boy, who gave the limit a close run himself.

The party then repaired to Elizabeth Lake, which even then was splendidly stocked with ducks. Canvasbacks and mallards were actually plentiful.

Morgan owns a big acreage of land near the lake and proposes to form a big club upon it. Natural quail and duck shooting; deer in the mountains, wild cats, occasional bear not far away, should make of this a hunters' paradise if Morgan puts his scheme through—and he should have little trouble securing support from the sportsmen. Such a proposition is needed here. The preserves are really doing a good work toward the conservation of game—they are furnishing an offset to the constant drainage of the natural resorts of aquatic fowl. Hunters of experience well know that the gradual decrease of game fastnesses has as much to do with the growing scarcity of sporting material as shotguns have—perhaps more.

The ducks and geese should be rigidly protected in Alaska, their great breeding grounds in the North. They should also have some great tracts of land set apart for them in the South as a sort of winter resort.

President Roosevelt did a grand work, one that stamped him as every inch a sportsman, and a sportsman's sympathizer when he set aside certain of the great islands in the delta of the Mississippi as Federal game preserves. What is needed is more of the same. Game is a valuable asset of any country; it plays no mean part in molding the national character.

Nazzari, driver of one of the Fiat cars entered for the Vanderbilt race, after his first trip over the Vanderbilt course, declared it to be the best course for such a race he ever had seen, and Nazzari has seen all the famous racing roads of Europe

The Lancer.

When Otheman Wept.

THERE be many sad things in this, our vale of tears, gentle reader, as you and The Lancer and all our neighbors well know. There are things that wring the heart and sadden the soul. The night-hawking youth, who keeps his poor, old mother up long past midnight hour singing "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight," that's a very sad picture to contemplate. And there is the wayward daughter, and the widow and the orphan; the first day of school, the prodigy next door practicing on the piano, and a thousand and one other wretched instances that might be called to mind.

But, oh, dearly beloved, there is yet one thing more, and it is still the saddest of all human spectacles. It is the sight of a strong man in tears.

We had a demonstration of this cruel and bitter truth right here during the past week. It was upon the occasion of a theatrical benefit given for a popular actor who is compelled to go to Arizona to recuperate his health and not to die, although the dramatic pot-boilers insist that it is to die and to die only that the gentleman seeks the cactus-hedged shores of the historic Hassayampa in "the land that God forgot." It was upon this occasion, we say, that that saddest of all human spectacles—a strong man in tears—was [illegible] witnessed.

The name of the man who wept is Otheman. That must be his name, for he acknowledges it himself. He is a chronicler, is Otheman—a scribe, if not a Pharisee—and he works for a local yellow journal which prints his name regularly in black letters over the slop [illegible] dumps.

Well, "this here" Otheman is a strong man, with a strong breath and he wept—wept at the show, right before everybody, and he had not wept before in twenty-five years, according to his own printed statement. To be sure, he qualified his admission by saying that he "did not remember" having wept before in twenty-five years. Maybe he did weep once, but he does not remember it. What matter about that? The important fact remains that he wept this time, as he tells us under his own name. O foolish tears! O Otheman in the weeps!

But after Otheman wept, he did another strange thing. "I found myself standing on a seat and waving my hat and shouting Oberle," says he. And he adds: "No one paid any attention to me." How modest is our hero. The idea of no one paying any attention to Otheman! Everybody there had their eyes glued on him. And do you know what they were thinking, gentle reader? They were thinking what a fine thing it would be to lay hold of a large, [illegible], soft and luscious custard pie that they might push the same upon Otheman's face.

Green-eyed Envy.

The Lancer notes with feelings of [illegible] that certain of our "parboiled contemporary" newspapers beyond the fastnesses of the Tehachepi are worrying themselves about this sunlit land of [illegible] where we dwell happily and in peace with one another. These "ger-[illegible]" and the typewriter-pounders [illegible] say Southern California is not a place for a white man to live in, and give vent to other remarks [illegible] would indicate an enlarged condition of the spleen, and a hard, disordered state of the liver. Listen to this, from the Oakland Herald:

"By comparison, Oakland is so [illegible] of Los Angeles as a place of residence that Californians make no mistake in selecting between them. So [illegible] hundred other lesser cities in Alta California, and as for rural homes, the foothills and valleys of Santa Clara, Alameda and Contra Costa, in fact of the entire region around the bay, are infinitely superior to the wind-swept sand dunes of Los Angeles, that if easterners would investigate before purchasing there would be a slump in the price of cactus lands that would jar the real estate men of the South with such force as to loosen their teeth."

Now, isn't that spiteful and mean? Sure, they are fine, those valleys up yonder, and we don't dispute it. Santa Clara, vale of beauty, soft with the breath of the neighboring sea, white with blossoms in the lovely springtime, and serene beneath the glory of the Santa Cruz Mountains—ah, yes, that's a sight to do the heart good, we'll admit. And Alameda is a nice enough place, too, and so is Contra Costa, for that matter. Even Oakland is pretty in spots.

But whoever before had the hardihood, the nerve or the sublime impudence to compare the California of the North to this our California of the South—the land that God made on that happiest day of all the seven that He took to make the whole world? What talk, what very foolish talk.

Well does that miserable scribbler of Oakland know that he lies about us; the wonder being that the lie did not choke him. This land of the South, what is it but the Land o' Heart's Desire? What is it but Eden? What is it but the Mecca of the hungering soul and the longing eyes of all the seven tribes of the scattered seed of man? Hills of glory and sunset seas; valleys green as emerald and highways hedged with flowers; sweep of shore and curve of mountain chain; snow-clad peaks and cañons cool with the breath of God. It is the land of dreams, of hope and of fulfillment. Southern California—land beloved of beauty. How could or how can any evil-tongued detractor find it in his conscience to speak aught but praise of her?

Heaven lies next door to Southern California—so near, indeed, that it is often difficult to say which is really which.

The Too-officious Truant Officer.

Maybe the job of truant officer in the average school district is not always as pleasant as it might be. I daresay that the fellow has his troubles, not only with the boy who is afflicted with hookey-playing propensities, but with that same boy's parent or parents, oftentimes, as the case may be. But that he may sometimes also make himself too officious, and even act in an inexcusably brutal way, there is evidence.

The Lancer learns of a case in one of the northern districts of the State where a truant officer displayed an excess of zeal that is equaled only by his lack of tact and that milk of human kindness which should always find a receptable in the heart. There is a woman in this man's district who is a widow and who works like a galley slave every day of her life to support a brood of twelve orphans. She has one boy of the legal working age, who is employed at a pittance as a telegraph messenger. This boy became ill, and in order to hold his job, the mother took the second eldest boy from school for a few days to toil in his brother's place. The officious truant man found it out, forced the boy back to school, and had the mother haled into court for violating the truant laws.

Now, what do you think of a wooden-headed and stony-hearted idiot of that kind?

Is there any use on earth for a man who hasn't any more sense or judgment or decency in him than this fellow displayed?

The law must be obeyed. Yes, of course. But God has laws that are wiser than many of the laws that we plaster over our statute books.

And, if God were selected as the umpire in this instance, The Lancer is of the belief that He would side with the widow and not with the truant officer.

NEWEST LINK WITH EUROPE.

[illegible] COMPANY'S LATEST ATLANTIC CABLE LAID.

Quick Time Made in Placing Ponderous Electric Conductor, Which Has Fast Signalling Speed—Lies at Some Points Nearly Three Miles Below Surface of the Sea.

The Commercial Cable Company's new Atlantic cable from Canso, Nova Scotia, to Waterville, Ireland, was completed and put in operation October 1. This makes seven trans-Atlantic cables worked in direct connection with the line of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company. All are duplexed, making their combined capacity fourteen messages at one time. The new cable is the best and most expensive submarine cable ever laid. It was manufactured by the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company of London, having been begun in [illegible], and finished and shipped aboard the construction company's steamer Colonia on August 3.

Atlantic cables always are laid from west to east, because the prevailing winds in the summer months on the Atlantic are from the west and ships make much better weather going east. Consequently the Colonia sailed light from England to America, arrived off the coast of Nova Scotia on [illegible] 18, and landed the heavy shore end of the cable on the morning of [illegible] 21. Moving out from the shore she struck a rock and remained fast on it for four days. The injuries sustained compelled it to go into dry dock at [illegible] with [illegible] miles of submarine cable on board. It was the largest and heaviest ship ever taken on that dry dock, exceeding by thousands of tons the United States battleship Indiana of [illegible] thousand tons, which went into dock there a couple of years ago. On September 22, after repairs were made, the Colonia laid its course from [illegible], N. S., paying out cable. On [illegible] it passed through a hurricane in mid-Atlantic, and on October [illegible] without mishap at a point [illegible] from the coast of Ireland, where the final splice was to be made between the cable it had laid out from the American side and that previously laid westward from the Irish coast by the steamship Cambria in June. The final splice was made on October 6. At some points the cable was laid at a depth of nearly three miles below the surface of the sea. The quantities of material used in the manufacture of the cable were 1,411,200 pounds of gutta percha, [illegible] pounds of brass tape, jute yarn, wire and preservative compounds. The signalling speed of this cable is [illegible] per cent greater than that of any other cable of equal length in the world. The cost of the cable ranges from [illegible] to $8000 per mile, according to the character of the ocean bottom and depth of water, the great variation in cost being due to the differences in sizes and weights of the sections of the cable, that laid in deepest water being lightest, because it would be impossible to retrieve a heavy cable from water against the enormous pressure. The sections laid near shores are massive and expensive.

In the neighborhood of the fishing grounds off the coast of New Foundland, a type of cable midway between deep water and shore end cable is used. This is made strong to resist injuries from the anchors of fishing craft, the most prolific source of danger to submarine cables. The intermediate type is just heavy enough to afford prospect of retrieving it in the event of damage by the anchor of a fishing vessel.

Our Sixth Sense.

The question of telepathic communication from the dying is of deep interest, for the theory concerns one's self, one's nature, one's existence, or one's nonentity. Of course, many will say that death is the end of us. But such statements are merely empty words—all the aspirations of humanity protest against the idea of annihilation. Ideals, dreams, hopes, justice, cannot logically be considered mere illusion any more than the body which is the subject of them. Does not feeling rank as high as reason? Anyhow, it is a very solemn problem. As Pascal says: "The immortality of the soul is such an important matter that one must be void of all feeling to wish to ignore it." Why should we ever despair of arriving at the knowledge of the nature of the thinking power which animates us, and knowing if it survives the destruction of the body or not?

Now to consider, the chance of a death at a distance coinciding with any particular sensation there are at least 16,591 chances to one against the two facts occurring the same day, unless the one was caused by the other. This is mathematically true, as we can see. For as there are on an average 22 deaths annually to every 1000, the chance is multiplied by the 365 days in the year, which makes the chances 365,000, and this divided by the 22 per 1000 brings it 16,591 and for young people or those in full strength the chances amount to 15,000, 19,000 or 20,000 to one.

Hence as cases of apparitions without the simultaneous death of the person seen do not amount to even the tenth part of the number of cases with a coincident death, is it not natural to conclude that there must be a cause for this effect?—[M. Camille Flammarion, in Harper's Weekly.

When You're in a Hurry

There is nothing like a good gas stove. A slow-going coal stove is exasperating. A "Quick Meal" gas stove gives you full measure of cooking heat in an instant, and a twist of the wrist turns off gas, heat and expense. Why not find out the cost?

PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Residents of the Second Ward sent a long petition to the Fire Commissioners yesterday asking for aid in the removal of the useless oil rigs from that territory. They will get it.

The Mayor suggested the curtailment of privileges for the burning of gasoline.

A contest of the will of the late Joseph D. Utter, an old man who left all his property to his housekeeper, will come up tomorrow before Judge Conrey.

A mix-up in the Lenox family is shown in a suit begun by Mrs. Fannie Lenox against her step-mother, who happens to be her aunt.

AT THE CITY HALL.

SECOND WARD MAY BE CLEAR.

BEAUTIFUL HILLS MAY BE FREE FROM DERRICKS.

Strong Petition Presented to Fire Commission Yesterday Asking Help, and Tomorrow It Is to be Extended—Hoseman Grilled, but Saved by Sympathy.

People of that part of the city which nature has designed for the most beautiful residence section of Los Angeles, are now thoroughly aroused, and the movement for the expulsion of the gaunt remains of a once-useful oil district, gains impetus every day.

The beautiful hills, crowned even now with many elegant homes, are unsightly on account of useless old derricks, and uncanny from the creaking of pumping jacks and petroleum fumes. The land, which cannot now be sold at any price, in some parts of the field, will at once become of great value as the finest homesites in the city, and there is no reason for permitting it to be maintained now as an unprofitable nuisance.

Residents of the district surrounded by Douglas and Colton streets, and Beaudry and Belleview avenues, to the number of 600, presented a protest to the Fire Commission yesterday against existing conditions in the Second Ward.

They asked that all oil derricks and pumping rigs be ordered removed, and that the owner of a noisome oil-treating plant at Bellevue and Temple, be required to remove it to the river bottom.

"This oil-treating plant is pratically a refinery," said the spokesman. "Oil is hauled there from all over the city, and the stench is so great that people have to shut their houses up tight at night, and in the morning when they open them it is almost unbearable."

The Mayor said he had been suffering for some years in the First Ward from the same cause, and had thus far been unable to obtain relief. At his suggestion the matter will be taken to the City Attorney for advice. Mr. Goudge, the deputy, stated that all permits for derricks will be revoked. This means the derricks must go. Preparatory to action on an ordinance on Monday, canceling all permits for derricks and pumping rigs, as stated in The Times yesterday, Councilman Blanchard was taken over the district in question yesterday, and the protestants held a conference with Councilman Hammon of the Second Ward.

SAVED HIS JOB.

BUT HE GOT "ROASTED."

Hoseman F. B. Cottle of engine company No. 17, went joggling through the Fire Commission mill yesterday, and after many thumps and bruises, came out still holding onto his job. The grip by which he held on was sympathy for his family.

Cottle was charged by Lieut. Smith with using profane and vulgar language to him, and in the interest of good discipline, Chief Lips thought the man ought to be discharged. He relented later, and helped save Cottle's job.

Cottle appeared, pleaded guilty and promised to be good, but it developed that once before he had walked away from one of the city fire companies and called that "resigning." He was reinstated last March. Mayor McAleer said:

"It's not right for the city to employ men of that kind, and we ought to putt hem out whenever we find them."

He then read Cottle a curtain lecture on the necessity for maintaining his self-respect, as well as the honor of his family and the department.

"What is your pleasure, gentlemen?" asked the Mayor.

Nobody seemed to have any. Then the members of the commission took turns at scoring the hoseman, but for the sake of peculiar conditions in his family thought he should be allowed to hold his place during good behavior.

Lieut. Smith was willing to have him remain if he was transferred to another company.

"Put him onto somebody else, and have him do the same thing?" chimed in Chief Lips. "I want him to stay where he is."

On request from the Chief the Fire Commission agreed to recommend to the City Council the passage of an ordinance giving to each member of the fire department an additional day off duty each month.

SHYING AT GASOLINE.

CAUSE OF MOST FIRES.

A large part of the fires in the city are caused by the use of gasoline in some form, and the fire department might be maintained at a cost greatly reduced from what it is at present, if this one cause alone could be removed, or guarded by more strenuous regulations.

Mayor McAleer said yesterday to the Fire Commission: "See here, what do you gentlemen think about granting no more permits for gasoline engines in planing mills? You can refuse to grant them if you want to."

That is a step in the right direction, and after informally talking it over, it was passed with the remark by the Mayor that the subject would be taken up later. The talk apparently set the members thinking, and when Stefan Zassak asked to be permitted to install a gasoline engine in a building at the corner of Sixth and San Pedro streets, there was a halt in the proceedings, and it was determined that Mr. Zassak could wait a week, and meanwhile they would go around and take a look at his place.

Warren Phillips also felt the weight of late caution. He applied for a permit to install a gasoline engine at No. 1228 South Figueroa street, but was promptly refused the privilege.

Biescar Bros., however, were permitted to place a storage tank for distillate at No. 324 East First street.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

HOUSEKEEPER IS MADE HEIRESS.

CONTEST MONDAY FOR ESTATE OF JOSEPH D. UTTER.

Over Seventy Years of Age, Left All Property to Young Woman, and Did Not Even Mention Name of Sister, His Sole Remaining Relative.

When Joseph D. Utter died in this city last June he left all his property to his housekeeper. The estate does not amount to a great deal, but it far more than sufficed to provoke the sister of the deceased, Mrs. Delila D. Adams of San Diego to contest the will.

Altogether the property is supposed to be worth between $4000 and $5000, and is partly in Orange county and partly in this city. Utter was 72 years of age when he died, and the will under which Lula McCleave claims his estate bears date of Nov. 2, 1904. She petitioned for probate, stating that she was named sole executrix and sole devisee. Charles S. Boyd, No. 500 Gladys avenue, and H. B. Alexander, No. 1038 South Olive street, were the witnesses, and on its face the will appears to be all right.

When Mrs. Adams, the San Diego sister, heard of the will, she flew to arms, not only for the sake of the money, but to knock out the woman whom she claims as housekeeper had no natural claim on her brother, and to justify the good sense and fairness of the deceased. She at once filed a contest, in which she contends that her brother was from a variety of reasons utterly unable to make a will at the time when the alleged last document was executed.

Mrs. Adams alleges that her brother had lost his wife not very long before his death, and that the shock was so great that with his years and the sickness that had afflicted him his mental condition rendered him unfit to make a will. Furthermore this sister maintains that Mrs. Lulu McCleave influenced him for her own benefit. Mrs. Lulu is accused of being young—about 30—and of having told the old man that his sister didn't care for him. Then the sister somewhat indignantly adds that Mrs. Lulu was not related to her brother, and had no claim upon his bounty.

The sister is the only relative Utter left in this State, and the only other relatives are nephews and nieces. Tomorrow the contest will open before Judge Conrey, sitting in the Probate Court.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

CONTEMPT CASE. The citation for contempt issued against W. W. Widaman came up before Judge Smith yesterday, but owing to the absence of David C. Wilson, the man who testified to facts upon which the citation was based, the case went over until the 23d inst.

REAL ESTATE. The American Realty Company has incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, and $15,000 subscribed. C. J. Shutes, F. P. Noble and F. W. Wismer, all of Los Angeles, are directors.

GOLD MINING. The Dorleska Gold Mining Company has incorporated with a capital stock of $1,000,000, with $7000 subscribed. The directors are H. Z. Osborne, T. F. Hayes, C. Leonardt, C. Wellborn, H. S. Van Dyke, William M. Van Dyke, all of Los Angeles, and C. M. Williams, Pasadena.

SMASHED HIS OFFICE.

LEWIS SUES MRS. NOURSE.

A short time ago Mrs. Eva M. Nourse attracted a good deal of attention by reducing a small frame real estate office belonging to Floyd F. Lewis to splinters. Yesterday Lewis started in to have his inning by beginning suit against Mrs. Nourse to recover $2500.

The firm of Works, Lee and Works are representing Lewis in the case. It is alleged that the real estate office in the Arlington Heights tract was worth $150, and that in breaking it to pieces Mrs. Nourse kept him out of possession despite the fact that he had right to the possession for two months. In that two months Lewis avers that he could have netted a profit of $1000. The balance of the amount demanded is for clerk hire, loss of real estate signs and other losses.

SUES STEPMOTHER.

WANTS DEED SET ASIDE.

Mrs. Fannie Lenox has begun suit against Mrs. Elizabeth Lenox to annul a deed, obtained, so it is claimed, under rather dubious conditions. Both parties to the action are widows, and the plaintiff is stepdaughter to her own aunt, who is the defendant.

The father of plaintiff, Andrew J. Lenox, died in 1896. Mrs. Fannie is a daughter by his first marriage, he later marrying his deceased wife's sister, when Fannie was 6 years old. Prior to her father's death it is alleged that he made provision for his wife and children, and to his wife and Fannie he left the family home and the real estate upon which the home stands, at No. 331 East Fourth street, between Wall and San Pedro streets. After his death Fannie says her stepmother told her that really she had no right to an interest in the property, and asked her to deed to her all her, Fannie's, interest. Mrs. Elizabeth Lenox told her that she could never keep her share in the property, inasmuch as she had no money even to pay taxes, and that on that account she was bound to be sold out. For these reasons Mrs. Elizabeth tried to persuade her stepdaughter to ded to her, but the plaintiff refused. In the fall of 1897 Mrs. Elizabeth took ill and supposed herself to be dying.

In 1897 the stepmother became ill and prevailed upon the stepdaughter to execute the deed. Later Mrs. Elizabeth's son came to live with her, and made life unbearable for Fannie, and she left. She has since learned that the law provides a way for setting aside deeds made under these circumstances, and that she is now seeking to do. She alleges that she has been told many times by her stepmother that she would not inherit a cent of her estate.

MAY SEND HER HOME.

HELP FOR KIDNAPED GIRL.

In all probability the sixteen-year-old girl, Jermana Rodriguez, who told such a heartrending story while on the witness stand in Justice Pierce's court on Friday, will be returned to her family in Chihuahua.

When the charges against Mrs. Juana Guerrero were first exploited, and the sorrowful advantures of Jermana were first made known, Señor Losano y Castro, Mexican Consul in this city, went to great trouble and considerable expense to discover the facts and give what aid he could to the abused girl. A number of families of standing in the city have come forward offering to help Jermana, but the proportion of offers from Spanish-speaking families is very small.

At present Jermana and her four-year-old brother are at the Ransome Home, but failing to find a thoroughly safe and comfortable home for the girl here, the Mexican Consul will co-operate with the District Attorney during the present week, with the end in view of having Jermana and the child returned to their parents in the city of Chihuahua.

POLICE COURT.

BROWN HELD FOR TRIAL.

John W. Brown, a negro accused of a murderous assault upon his wife and daughter, was held to the Superior Court for trial yesterday by Police Justice Chambers under $5000 bonds. The specific charge under which Brown was bound over is the attack upon his wife, although his daughter suffered more severe injuries at her father's hands, it is alleged, and is still suffering from the bullet wounds which she received. Brown was employed in a curio store at Fourth and Spring streets, and secreted himself beneath his wife's bed at her home near River Station, Brown having separated from her. While she was asleep Brown is said to have attacked her with a board, and upon his daughter's interference fired two shots at the latter, both of which took effect in her arm.

THEATER MANAGERS.

Four theater managers, arrested for alleged violation of the fire ordinance, were arraigned before Police Justice Rose yesterday. A. J. Morganstern and A. M. Cox pleaded not guilty, and will be tried at 10 o'clock the 27th inst. Henry Koch filed a demurrer to the charge, which will be heard the 18th inst. The trial of H. W. Oviatt was set for the 27th at 2 o'clock. All of the men were released on their personal recognizance.

GRAND LARCENY CHARGED.

R. E. Weaver, arrested on a grand larceny charge, was arraigned before Police Justice Austin yesterday morning and his examination set for Monday at 3 o'clock. Bonds in the sum of $1500 were imposed.

COOK WITH KNIFE.

Henry Miller, cook in a grading camp, was arraigned before Police Justice Rose yesterday on the charge of assault with a deadly weapon, to which he pleaded not guilty. His case will be heard October 23. Samuel Lane, an emloyé in the camp, is still at the Receiving Hospital, suffering from a wound over the heart alleged to have been inflicted by Miller with a butcher knife.

DEEP MINES AT TOMBSTONE.

WORK WILL CONTINUE TO ONE THOUSAND FEET.

Dr. Ricketts's Purchase of Greene Copper Stock for Himself Started Rumor of Sale of Cananea Property to Phelps, Dodge & Co.—New Concentrator at Morenci.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

TUCSON (Ariz.) Oct. 13.—The management of the Tombstone Consolidated Mines Company is pushing the new main shaft of the great property down from the 800 to the 1000-foot level. Three machine drills, with three shifts of miners, are being worked. The volume of water encountered has been much less than had been expected. A single pump is taking care of it. The pump equipment of the company now is capable of handling 6,000,000 gallons a day. On the 1000-foot level, which will be absolutely new ground in the Tombstone district, the fullest of development will be undertaken. Rich ore has been struck on the 400-foot level. Work is being pushed on the company's new mill, the old mill at Charleston being drawn upon for part of its equipment.

Dr. L. D. Ricketts, the metallurgical expert for Phelps, Dodge & Co., will leave soon for Europe, to study continental methods for the treatment of sulphuretic ores. On arriving again form abroad, he will return to Globe to supervise the completion of the Old Dominion smelter and concentrator. The story that he was to become manager of the Cananea mines and works, and that the Phelps-Dodge Company had secured control of the property, came through the fact that Dr. Ricketts has invested in the stock of the Greene Consolidated Company. It is stated that Phelps, Dodge & Co. have contracted far ahead for the delivery of copper at 16½ cents.

The new furnace of the Calumet and Arizona at Douglas will be started before the end of the month.

The Arizona Copper Company has begun the construction of a new concentrator at Morenci. It will be of immense capacity, especially for the handling of the ores of the Humboldt mine. A contract for furnishing $50,000 worth of structural iron for the concentrator has just been let to H. J. Burt of Denver, calling for the delivery of 400 tons of metal.

The last grand jury in Graham county failed to find a true bill against President Ross of the Standard Copper Company, accused of illegal doings with the books of the corporations.

A satisfactory freight rate secured between Globe and El Paso has resulted in a contract for the delivery at the latter point of 40,000 tons of ore from the Live Oak mines near Globe, shipments to run at least fifty tons a day. The ores are silicious and sulphide, and carry in excess of 10 per cent. of copper.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1

CRITIC LOST TRUE FRIEND.

Winter Laments Death of Sir Henry Irving.

Calls Him the Greatest Actor of All Time.

Recounts Personal Incidents of Player's Life.

A friend of Henry Irving for thirty years, William Winter doubtless feels more keenly than any man in America the death of England's great knighted player.

At the University Club yesterday, after luncheon, he talked with the keen regret of an intimate associate of the actor's passing, and recounted many incidents and personal characteristics of his career.

"I believe that his death might be traced directly to his production of 'The Bells,' the night before he died," said Mr. Winter. "Years ago I warned him that the physical and mental strain was too great for any man past middle life; his physician warned him; all his friends counseled him to do Mathias no more. But intense work was his life, and he died, as he wished, before he became a superannuated old man, a memory while still alive. Unless you have seen it you have no idea of the intensity of Irving in the part. I have seen other talented actors play it—and they were actually stupid in comparison. He threw into the creation an appalling nervous tension and physical abandon that seemed to me must kill an ox.

"Irving was a noble man, a gentleman, a man of the kindliest instincts. His mind was marvelous. He had an absolute grasp on every subject. Comedy today, and tragedy tomorrow, and he would play them both equally well. He had a repertoire of 650 parts, the most astounding number on record for any actor. Jefferson had—we will say—120, other actors thought this unusual, and few have ever passed the [illegible] mark.

"I cannot agree with the London editorial which says this morning that Irving was a man who dominated his audience by brain alone—that he was not an actor of feeling. He was a man of tremendous feeling, but a man of mighty mind, and he never let his emotions run away with his impersonation. Had he not been a man of heart as well as brain, there would have been no domination of his audiences as he dominated them, for women are not made to cry and men to forget themselves by machinery.

"Nor is it true, as another dispatch announced, that Irving's wife is insane. She was never insane for a moment, but the couple didn't live happily together. It was a mismated marriage, but both have always acted in a perfectly honorable and upright manner. The father has given his two boys, H. B. and Laurence Irving, a splendid education at Oxford, and H. B., originally intended for the legal profession, is an actor of promise.

"To my mind," continued Mr. Winter, "Irving is the greatest actor who has ever lived. His genius was so universal—there was nothing that he could not grasp—that he was the real character in every impersonation that he undertook, and his undertakings embraced every phase of masculine humanity. To see him once, you might say that his most representative creation was Mathias in 'The Bells,' but to my mind I will always think of him as Dr. Primrose, a masterpiece of simple reality.

"He used to say to me, 'Now, Will, if you were an actor, there's the thing you would want to do!' To select three parts in which he was preeminently great, one might choose Mathias, Macbeth and Mephistopheles."

Musingly, and with a note of sorrow in his voice, the critic went on: "Mr. Irving and my boy Arthur—lovely creature, killed at fourteen in an accident—used to recite the great scene from 'Richelieu' together. Arthur was a promising lad, and I believe he would have made a masterful actor had he lived. Once when they had finished, I said to Irving: 'I believe that Arthur declaims that as well as you do.' Mr. Irving looked at me for a moment. 'Yes,' he said, 'perhaps he does; perhaps he does. Perhaps there are other men who can declaim it better than I; I do not pretend to be a declaimer—I am an actor.' And there you have the difference between Irving and so many other men of the stage. He made no pretensions

A friend of Henry Irving for thirty years, William Winter doubtless feels more keenly than any man in America the death of England's great knighted player.

At the University Club yesterday, after luncheon, he talked with the keen regret of an intimate associate of the actor's passing, and recounted many incidents and personal characteristics of his career.

"I believe that his death might be traced directly to his production of 'The Bells,' the night before he died," said Mr. Winter. "Years ago I warned him that the physical and mental strain was too great for any man past middle life; his physician warned him; all his friends counseled him to do [illegible] no more. But intense work was his life, and he died, as he wished, before he became a superannuated old man, a memory while still alive. Unless you have seen it you have no idea of the intensity of Irving in the part. I have seen other talented actors play it—and they were actually stupid in comparison. He threw into the creation an appalling nervous tension and physical abandon that seemed to almost kill an ox.

"Irving was a noble man, a gentle man, a man of the kindliest instincts. His mind was marvelous. He had an absolute grasp on every subject. Comedy today, and tragedy tomorrow, and he would play them both equally well. He had a repertoire of 650 parts, the most astounding number on record for any actor. Jefferson had—we will say—[illegible] other actors thought this unusual, and few have ever passed the [illegible] mark.

"I cannot agree with the London editorial which says this morning that Irving was a man who dominated his audience by brain alone—that he was not an actor of feeling. He was a man of tremendous feeling, but a man of mighty mind, and he never let his emotions run away with his impersonation. Had he not been a man of heart as well as brain, there would have been no fascination of his audiences as he [illegible] them, for women are not apt to cry and men to forget themselves by machinery.

"Nor is it true, as another dispatch [illegible], that Irving's wife is insane. She was never insane for a moment. The couple didn't live happily together. It was a mismated marriage, [illegible] have always acted in a per- [illegible]erable and upright manner. [illegible] has given his two boys, [illegible] Laurence Irving, a splendid [illegible] at Oxford, and H. B., originally intended for the legal profession, [illegible] an actor of promise.

"To my mind," continued Mr. Winter, "[illegible] the greatest actor who has lived. His genius was so universal [illegible] was nothing that he could not [illegible] he was the real character [illegible] impersonation that he undertook [illegible] his undertakings embraced [illegible] of masculine humanity. To him once, you might say that [illegible] representative creation was [illegible] in 'The Bells,' but to my mind [illegible] always think of him as Dr. [illegible], a masterpiece of simple [illegible].

"He used to say to me, 'Now, Will, if you were an actor, there's the thing you would want to do!' To select [illegible] parts in which he was preeminently great, one might choose [illegible], Macbeth and Mephistopheles."

[illegible], and with a note of sorrow in his voice, the critic went on: "Mr. Irving and my boy Arthur—lovely [illegible], killed at fourteen in an accident—used to recite the great scene from 'Richelieu' together. Arthur was a promising lad, and I believe he would have made a masterful actor had he lived. Once when they had finished, I said to Irving: 'I believe that Arthur declaims that as well as you do.' Mr. Irving looked at me for a moment. 'Yes,' he said, 'perhaps he does—perhaps he does. Perhaps there are other men who can declaim it better than I; I do not pretend to be a [illegible]—I am an actor.' And there you have the difference between Irving and so many other men of the [illegible]. He made no pretensions to [illegible] or elocution. He sought no [illegible] save to create the impression of reality. He tried to simulate a living human being.

"His work was the mirror of his [illegible], an expression, in its unchanging [illegible] and force, of the powerful personality of the man behind it. As long ago as [illegible]—yes, I believe that was the [illegible]—he and I were driving down [illegible] Park together one afternoon. He [illegible] then that he was approaching [illegible] later years, although not yet to [illegible], and with a great gesture he [illegible] out his hand and exclaimed, '[illegible] but just ten years more; ten years of life—genuine life; I do not [illegible] to be an old man like other old men.' And yet, so great was the physical [illegible] within him that he lived on [illegible] for more than twice that [illegible].

"[illegible] years he had dreamy spells, [illegible] he would want to give up his [illegible] and rest, and sometimes he would [illegible], with that quiet smile of his: 'If [illegible] is good, and the next [illegible] or three are like it, I will have [illegible] to live comfortably, and then [illegible] all have a house at the seashore [illegible] a happy time the rest of our days.' [illegible] that time never came; the stuff [illegible] him was not the kind that [illegible] he would have been discontented [illegible] a year.

"[illegible] of the things about Irving [illegible] his intimate friends were not [illegible] to know was his private [illegible]. Yet I knew at least one poor [illegible], once a famous Richard III, living [illegible] his latter end in comparative [illegible] because of the pity of England's greatest theatrical figure.

"[illegible] his own mind, as he told me con[illegible], Irving regarded Lear as [illegible] achievement. Yet the [illegible] took it kindly. He played [illegible] man, senile and decrepit, [illegible]. And the successful [illegible] is the anomaly of a feeble [illegible] with the strong voice of [illegible]. I believe that Irving was [illegible] he did not essay for [illegible] before his death, but he [illegible] master of the part in his [illegible]. His son has achieved [illegible] in the role.

"[illegible] of his marvelous stage [illegible] the old Waterloo soldier, [illegible] senility and bodily [illegible], yet full of vanity to [illegible] boasting of his exploits on the great historic battlefield."

In the New York Tribune today Mr. Winter says, in his summing up of the dead actor's achievements and career: "The stage has lost its most illustrious figure and the world has lost a great benefactor. For thirty years he held the destiny of the English stage in the hollow of his hand, and during all that time he presented only the greatest subjects, and he presented them only in the greatest manner. He touched nothing base. He was a great actor—certainly the greatest actor of his time, and, so far as the printed records of the stage enable a studious observer to judge, he was the greatest actor that ever lived."

In his address before the Friday Morning Club, day before yesterday, Mr. Winter summed up the potential influences that have been exerted to dignify and raise the theater, and said of Henry Irving: "Above all, and notwithstanding every adversity of materialism, in a teeming civilization of luxury and greed, Henry Irving—lifting the English stage out of ignominious decadence, and raising it to such glory as it never knew before—made the whole world resound with acclamation of his great deeds, his affluent genius, his passionate integrity of purpose, his whole-hearted devotion to the highest ideals, and his pure, gentle and beautiful life."

MEXICO.

LATINS DON'T TAKE TO IT.

Not Pleased With Roosevelt's Peace Medicine.

European Influence Resents Monroe Doctrine.

Commerce With Mexico is on the Increase.

BY EDWARD C. BUTLER.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 6.—The news that President Roosevelt, the pacificator, is preparing a message to Congress, declaring a new policy, aligned to the Monroe doctrine, is creating some comment here.

This scheme of taking a bond on fate may or may not commend itself to the United States Congress. But if reports correctly set forth Mr. Roosevelt's policy, as one of benevolent guardianship, there will be objection in Mexico, Brazil, the Argentine and other prominent Latin-American republics.

The twentieth century interpretation of the Monroe doctrine is resented, more or less openly, by South Americans who have intimate commercial relations with Europe, who visit Europe frequently and whose ports contain many European merchants.

A North American protecorate over Central and South America would always be objectionable, even if not resented openly. Of course, Mexico cannot forget the practical aid lent to her in 1867 under the Monroe doctrine against the pretentions of Napoleon III, but the Congress of the United States should bear in mind what is called in Mexico amor propio, another name for patriotism, and not inflict upon Latin-America a forced protectorate.

Latin-Americans have ideals and ambitions of their own, as have the North Americans, and are proceeding peacefully along characteristic lines, in accordance with their racial genius, in order to develop themselves into great and powerful countries. They are possessed of dignity and self-respect, and while, for instance, they deplore the Venezuelan tactics, they want to be let alone to work out their own national salvation.

The latest showing of commerce between Mexico and the United States evidences that large sums of American capital have been invested in business enterprises in Mexico, in agriculture, mining, transportation and manufacturers, while Mexico has contributed largely to the commercial requirements of the United States by increasing supplies of productions natural to her soil.

The imports from Mexico into the United States in 1874 amounted to $4,346,364, and in 1904, $43,633,275, an increase since 1874 of $39,286,911. The exports to Mexico from the United States were, in 1874, $5,946,839, and in 1904, $45,844,720, an increase of $39,897,981. And still Mexico is inviting American enterprise and American capital and offers absolutely the same security and the same stability as in the United States.

The irrigation fever is epidemic in Mexico, as is shown by the daily reports in the Diario Official, the organ of the government. Daily concessions are granted by the Department of Fomento, for the use of waters scattered over interests extending from one end of the country to the other. Aside from the big $10,000,000 irrigation plan proposed in Tamaulipas and Coahuila, under Federal jurisdiction, irrigation is being given a great impetus in the states of Mexico, Durango, Sonora, Tamaulipas, Hidalgo, Guanajuato, San Luis Potosi, Aguascalientes, Oaxaca and Guerrero. Of all the states, probably most is being accomplished in the way of irrigation in the state of Chihuahua, where schemes are now on foot for the redemption of probably not less than 300,000 acres of land.

There has been some delay in filling the orders for steel rails in the United States and in Germany for the building along the Cananea, Yaqui River and Pacific Railroad. The management of this Southern Pacific line in Mexico has, therefore, placed a large order for rails with Spanish manufacturers. This is said to be the first time an order for Spanish rails in any quantity has been placed by railroad companies building in Mexico for more than twenty-five years past. The price of Spanish rails, as compared with the prices quoted by American manufacturers, is reported to be somewhat less. The first of these rails will be used in the line above mentioned, and then later they may be also used on the Alamos line and the line from Guadalajara to Guaymas.

Robert Mitchell, president and general manager of the South Cananea Copper Mining Company, who has made a thorough study of the recent indications on the property, feels warranted in the immediate order of a complete steam hoist. Surface indications and sub-surface formation, disclosed by the shaft, show the same characteristics of the Massey deposit. They lead to the opinion that the ore body will be struck when a depth of about 125 feet is reached.

Mrs. Phoebe Hearst will arrive in Mexico in about a week or ten days. She is coming in a private car, accompanied by a number of young women friends, whom she takes pleasure in showing the strange and unique features of Mexico. This is the third trip she has made to this country and on each occasion she was accompanied by a choice number of women guests. Mrs. Hearst is the proprietoress of the Babicora hacienda in the state of Chihuahua, a very large plantation, and she owns mining interests in Santa Eulalia, near that city, and other mining camps in this country.

Rev. John Alexander Dowie, the Zionist, arrived in this city Tuesday morning over the Mexican Central, accompanied by a party of twelve, including his wife and family. On the way down from Chicago Mr. Dowie is said to have suffered from a paralytic stroke, but reached this city in good health. He has not yet decided upon the location of his Eden, or second Zion City, but it will probably be somewhere in the state of Tamaulipas.

While President Palma of Cuba is the storm center of politics in that island, his son, José Estrada Palma, is in this city, filling a railroad position. He has been appointed assistant city ticket agent of the National lines, taking the place of A. F. Taylor. Young Palma wearied of social life in Cuba, as incidental to his father's position, decided to come to Mexico, where he would not have so many social obligations. He has determined to learn all he can of the railroad business, and for a while worked in the auditing department of the Interoceanic, so as to obtain an insight into that branch of railroad work.

A trainload of bankers are on their way to Mexico City, the special being due at El Paso next Sunday. There will be few stops en route, and the train is expected here next Wednesday forenoon.

California Grown Ostrich Feathers Beat the World

It is a demonstrated fact that ostriches bred and raised in California produce finer plumage than ostriches from any other section of the world. The half wild, half starved birds of Africa cannot be expected to produce feathers which compare with the luxuriant plumage which adorn the well cared for and properly fed ostriches of California.

Not only do we grow the feathers, but we have our own factory, located just outside the Ostrich Farm at South Pasadena, where we employ the most expert operators it was possible to secure in New York City. The product of our factory is superior in every respect to the product of the sweat shop factories of New York City, Londan and Paris.

Repair Work

We do the very best class of repairing in our factory. The same operators who make our new goods also do the repairing, re-dyeing, re-curling, re-marking of boas and plumes and tips. Bring your old feathers and have them made into new articles. An old boa which looks shabby and stringy can be made into a beautiful new boa by addition of feathers at a cost ranging from $4.00 to $10.00. There are no other expert operators capable of this kind of work in Southern California. We guarantee satisfaction on all repairing. The price list of repair work will be mailed free upon request.

All Colors Dyed to Order

If you want any particular color in any kind of ostrich goods we can make it to order on 24 hours' notice.

35 Chicks Just Hatched

35 bright little chicks have just been hatched. They will be on exhibition at the South Pasadena farm for a few days, after which they will be sent to our large breeding farm at La Habra.

Our Trade Mark Is a Guarantee

Every feather which we make bears our trade-mark in miniature on the back of the quill. Some stores claim to have Cawston ostrich feathers, but we have no agencies anywhere. The trade-mark on the quill is your protection.

Save 50 Per Cent. Import Duty

There is an import duty of 50 per cent. which New York dealers have to pay for the plumes and boas, etc., which they import. Every feather coming to this country must pay the duty. The only place where domestic feathers are to be had is at our salesrooms, where they can be purchased in person or through the mail.

The Brownsberger Home School

The Largest Business College in Los Angeles.

Last year, at the height of the business college season, February, every desk in our Bookkeeping Hall was taken. This year, at the beginning of the term, that enrollment is nearly doubled. New desks—all roll-top office style—have been put in place, and additional bank and office elevations are completed.

In the Shorthand Department last year we had one hundred machines. This year we are adding twenty visible typewriters, of all the popular makes, and both double and single keyboards. This great expense indicates the growth of the school in that department. We have room on our great premises for still another hundred pupils, without crowding. Pupils have the use FREE, at home or at school, or in both places, of any make of typewriter they prefer.

Our Preparatory Department already demands the attention of three teachers and a separate building. This department makes it possible for all, no matter what their age or attainments, to receive a good English education, or take the business and commercial and shorthand courses.

Men, It's Free!

Book Free
ELECTRIC BELT

Ask me to send you, sealed, free, a book just completed, which will inspire any man to be bigger, stronger, younger (if he is old,) and more manly than he ever felt. I am a builder of men.

I can take any weak, puny man, and make him feel like a Sandow. Of course, I can't make a Hercules of a man who was never intended by nature to be strong and husky. I don't mean that.

But I can take a man who started with a fair constitution and before it got fully developed began tearing it down. That fellow is weak-nerved, slow, poky, lacking in vim, ambition, self-confidence. I can make a man of him in three months, so that his own friends won't know him.

Every man who is weak and "going back" knows that there ought to be something which will restore that old "steam" to his physical body. He has tried the usual drug method and found that a fizzle, and yet he knows there must be something.

I know it, too, and I've got it. It's Electricity. You can't name anything more likely to have that force which a weak man lacks. It's a natural power. I can pump it into a weak man while he sleeps and make him feel like a Sandow in no time. It's the spice of life.

I want you to read this book and learn the truth about my arguments. If you are not as vigorous as you would like to be, if you have rheumatic pains, weak kidneys, loss of vitality, prostatic troubles, nervous spells, varicocele or any ailment of that kind that unmans you, it would assure you future happiness if you would look into this method of mine. Don't delay it; your best days are slipping by. If you want this book I send it closely sealed free if you inclose this coupon. Call for free consultation. Office Hours—8 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 10 to 1.

"House and Lot"—Weekly Review of Real Estate and Building—Continued.

AMONG OWNERS AND DEALERS.

ACTIVE REAL ESTATE MARKET DURING THE PAST WEEK.

A Strong Demand for Building Lots of Moderate Price and for Small Residences Prevails All Over the City—Costly Houses are Slow of Sale.

The week has been an active one in transfers of residences of moderate value and of building lots for homes of the same class. High cost residence lots are slower and high cost improved residence property is very slow. The demand for business property is very active, but business is restricted owing to the indisposition of holders to name any price. Whenever one is found willing to talk business he gets a prompt offer. Among the sales reported during the week the more noted were these:

Hollywood Beauty.

Carrol J. Daly & Co. have sold for C. E. C. Hodgson to Rose Feenan a house on the corner of Pallin street and Fountain avenue, Hollywood. The improvements consist of a three-story frame house, barn, outbuildings, pumping plant, and private electric lighting plant. The purchaser will make a number of improvements and occupy same; consideration $24,000.

Los Angeles and Winston.

Whitcomb Gibson Co. have sold for Ella H. Martindale 61x51 feet, corner of Los Angeles and Winston street, with nominal improvements, for $36,000.

Here is a Bunch.

Jones & Ryder Land Co. report the following sales: George F. Guy to Ben O. Rhoades, No. 1611 New Hampshire street, $3400, lot 50x150. Miss Lillian Golding to M. E. Diebold, lot on Forty-fifth street, near Figueroa, 45x150 feet, $560. Cook & Pierson to Poole & Jones, lot 7, block 9, Charles Victor Hall tract, $1000. Poole & Jones to Oscar Seewald, lot 22, block 12, Charles Victor Hall tract, $1325. L. E. Jones to Annie Laurence, lot on Forty-fifth street, near Figueroa, $725. Mrs. Kate McDonald to W. L. Loos, five-room cottage, No. 2943 Halldale avenue, lot 50x150 feet, $2300. J. M. [AUTHORIZED ANNOUNCEMENT.]

An Organization Devoted to the Best Interests of Los Angeles.

Los Angeles Realty Board, organized in the spring of 1903 by about thirty enterprising real estate agents of Los Angeles, now numbers 105 active agent members and about a score of associate and county members. From the outset the organization has declared its purpose to be the elevation of the standard of dealing in real estate, and the education of the public to a realization of the difference between business men of integrity and responsibility, and the irresponsible, and often transient persons who force themselves into the real estate business in times of great prosperity, although unqualified by experience, capital or character.

The Realty Board has met with a very large measure of success in these matters. Its Arbitration and Grievance Committee exists, as is set forth by advertisement every Sunday in The Times, for the purpose of settling any dispute between members and adjusting any complaints as to unfair dealing, whether preferred by members or by the public, and it is empowered to inflict severe penalties in case of violation of the ethical standard recognized by the board.

While many complaints of unfair and sometimes of positively fraudulent dealing, have been made to the secretary of the board, in nearly all cases such complaints have been preferred against agents who are not members of the board and by persons who have learned too late of the existence of the organization. In such cases there is, of course, no redress.

The Legislative Committee considers suggestions as to both State and municipal legislation, bearing in mind that the interests of property owners and of agents are identical in this respect. The placing of legible and durable signs indicating the names of streets, especially in the business district of the city, has been urged before the City Council within the past few months and will be agitated until the Council is aroused to action.

The board was foremost in indorsing the Owens River water project and has lately taken an active part in consideration of the possibilities of a further development of the inner harbor between San Pedro and Long Beach.

In May last, by invitation of the board, a convention of the realty dealers of the State was held in this city which resulted in the formation of the California State Realty Federation, which comprises local organizations in the other principal cities of the State and individual agents in towns where no real estate organization exists.

The same rules for the protection of owners and investors, already alluded to as a part of the constitution of the local board, have been adopted by the federation.

Much benefit has been derived by members of Los Angeles Realty Board through its semi-social features. Its meetings are held semi-monthly at luncheon and the more or less intimate association resulting has engendered a spirit of good fellowship and fraternity. Two or three excursions to other cities, notably to Salt Lake City, have been participated in by committees or delegates from the board.

While some of the results accomplished by this organization have been recalled, it is impossible to enumerate all the advantages derivable from it, or in the limits of this article to set forth its beneficial influence upon the development of this city and upon the general condition of the real estate business, but in a word it may be said that the board has accomplished much in the direction set forth in its motto: "To promote honesty, harmony and dignity in real estate transactions."

HERBERT BURDETT,
Secretary.

MILLIONS COMING.

Buy Real Estate.

The foregoing terse and pithy announcement stares people in the face on innumerable signboards in various parts of the city and greets them in the columns of the daily papers. It is the slogan adopted by Robert Mitchell, the Broadway real estate broker, for the business campaign which he has inaugurated. The remarkable rise in the value of desirable pieces of property within the past few years and the doubling of population which has taken place in Los Angeles, since Mr. Mitchell commenced business here four years ago, would seem to warrant him in adopting so thrilling a slogan.

In a recent interview upon the real estate situation Mr. Mitchell was asked his opinion as to the probable market this fall, to which he replied with characteristic energy, "The busy season coming? Is already here." Continuing he said, "Los Angeles will see one of the greatest influx of homeseekers this winter of any period of its existence, and property values will, in my opinion, very materially increase, especially in the desirable residence sections." After four years' of activity in the real estate market, during which time his finger has been constantly upon the pulse of the market, it is safe to say that Mr. Mitchell is well advised as to values and prospective values, as well.

Los Angeles is fortunate in having so many specialists among her real estate brokers, and the Robert Mitchell Co., while not confining its efforts to any one particular line, does make a specialty of both business and residence property of a high class, and has at all times a complete list of the best buys in the various sections of the city. A special feature of the business, and one that has grown to gratifying proportions within the past year, is that branch of the business devoted to loans. This department is in charge of Mr. Le Grande Betts, formerly connected with the Los Angeles Savings Bank. His close association with that time-honored institution, before its consolidation with the Security Savings Bank, gave him exceptional opportunities to become informed on property values, and since identifying himself with the Robert Mitchell Co. he has secured a most desirable clientele for the company.

While in the past the company has assisted in disposing of several desirable tracts, not until the South Vermont Avenue Tract was placed upon the market, some ninety days ago, did it launch a subdivision of its own. The location of the tract is excellent, being one-half mile south of Slauson avenue, with an excellent car service, some twenty minutes from the business center of the city. All the street work was done before the property was placed on the market, five-foot cement walks and cement curbs were laid, the streets oiled, water mains piped water to every lot, and in fact all the conveniences of city life were furnished. The tract was laid out in lots 50x143 feet, and as the soil is wonderfully productive, every lot allows ample room for a garden and lawn. So successful has the company been in disposing of this tract that negotiations are now under way for the opening of other choice residence property along the same lines.

A large number of clients, with money to invest, make the company their depository, with instructions to invest as the management sees fit, and the constantly increasing number of customers is the best evidence that could be presented of the acumen displayed in selecting choice investments for the clientage. As a member of the Governing Committee of the Los Angeles Realty Board, Mr. Mitchell is especially active in advancing the interests of that organization. His offices at 508 South Broadway occupy the entire ground floor, and, in their spaciousness and equipment, indicate the activity and prosperity of this prominent firm, which invites the confidence of the investor by the assurance given in its famous business motto of "NO MISREPRESENTATION."

BLACK BROS.

Business and Industrial Real Estate.

The firm of Black Bros., charter members of the Los Angeles Realty Board, was organized Nov. 15, 1902, by George N. Black and Julius R. Black, both of whom have been residents of Los Angeles since boyhood.

The original purpose of the firm had been to conduct a general real estate business in city and country property. However, shortly after the firm inaugurated its business, a radical change in policy was adopted, by substituting a special in place of a general line of business. The enormous amount of real estate handled annually in the local market had already made it practicable to do so, and the trend of some of the big firms had been to specialize in residence properties, subdivisions, country property, and more recently a firm has specialized in rentals.

About the time that the firm of Black Bros. entered upon their business career, no other agents had ventured to make an exclusive specialty of business property, and after a thorough review of the situation they decided to take up that line. In itself this was something of a bold undertaking for a practically unknown firm, since it entailed a long and sturdy assault upon an almost impregnable condition of affairs, to wit: the building up of a clientele among a class of operators who were more or less addicted to confining their business to the older brokerage houses.

The decision once made, everything was eliminated which did not pertain to the handling of business and industrial property, and to this special line the firm has confined its labors ever since. From the first success has met its efforts more than half way and it has emerged out of obscurity to occupy a leading position among the great real estate firms of the city, the ramification of its business extending far beyond the confines of Los Angeles. It is today a recognized authority on the subject of values of business and industrial realty.

Although comparatively speaking one of the youngest of the larger firms, it is one of the strongest in popular favor. Both members of the firm are men of strong personality and have succeeded in gathering to themselves an impregnable following among the heaviest operators in the market. A residence of some twenty years, coupled with a keen and shrewd observation of local conditions, together with an abiding faith in the future metropolitan greatness of the city, has supplied them with the ready wit to recognize and grasp every favorable opportunity to extract profit from a steadily rising market, and has established for them a clientele second to that of no other firm of agents in the city.

CARROLL J. DALY & COMPANY.

Active Promoters of Beach Properties.

Four years ago, when Mr. Carroll J. Daly and his brother, Henry F. Daly, first were attracted to Los Angeles as a field for their experience and capital, the city boasted but two seaside resorts, one of which, Santa Monica, was almost as old as Los Angeles itself, while the other, Long Beach, was more of a farming community than a beach resort such as are seen along the Atlantic Coast. Fresh from New York City, where they had been closely associated with the realty interests of the great metropolis, it occurred to them that here was an opportunity to build a beach town that could vie with any of the eastern resorts. Since that date, with one or two exceptions, the firm have devoted their time and energies as well as their capital to the growth of those delightful resorts between Playa del Rey and old Santa Monica.

As members of the Los Angeles Realty Board they at once became identified with that organization immediately following its founding, and have since been active members of the same. One of the first pieces of property Mr. Daly secured was a plot on the hill at Ocean Park which was cut up into eleven lots, at Short Line Beach.

Many of the lots in the original Short Line Beach tract were disposed of for $50 at the time and have since brought the purchasers $1900. So rapidly did the public take to the idea of a beach resort along the lines contemplated, that six additional subdivisions were placed on the market.

Mr. Daly enjoys the distinction of being one of the pioneers of that delightful resort and for a period of eight months represented the owners at that point. In the spring of 1902, he became interested in the Daly & Mettler Tract on Maple avenue, and met with gratifying success in disposing of the property at prices that have since made handsome profits for the purchasers.

About one year ago, Messrs. Carroll J. Daly & Co. and their associates purchased the "Venice Park" Tract consisting of 250 lots and placed it on the market, after having expended liberal sums in improvements that made it among the most exclusive and desirable of the beach tracts. The price of lots ranged from $250 up and eight months after being offered to the public the original tract had been disposed of. And as Mr. Daly stated to a reporter "every one who has purchased there has made a handsome profit on the investment." Many of the lots sold for $500 are now held as high as $1500. This firm have done their share in Los Angeles, having built up a city business in the last three years that is a credit to so young a firm.

The offices of the firm are located at No. 211 West First street, in the Laronde building, where representatives of the firm are always to be found.

LEONARD MERRILL.

President of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

During the fifteen years in which Leonard Merrill has been actively engaged in handling real estate deals in this city he has had wonderful opportunities to note the rapid increase in values, which to an outsider seem almost incredible. In a recent interview he spoke of one or two big transactions in which he figured in the year '95, one of which was the sale through his office to Homer Laughlin of the 120-foot lot on Broadway upon which is erected the Homer Laughlin building. This was secured by Mr. Laughlin for $700 a front foot, "and today," said Mr. Merrill, "the property is worth and could not be purchased for $4000 a foot." This was one of Mr. Laughlin's first investments, and has given him an increase of value equal to 50 per cent, per annum for the past ten years. About the same time W. H. Perry purchased through Mr. Merrill the lot, corner of Fifth and Broadway, where the Fifth-street Department Store now stands. Upon this property, also, Mr. Perry has secured a property which has increased in value from $500 a foot in '95 to $4000 a foot in '05. Dozens of instances similar to these are recalled by Mr. Merrill, who is among the oldest established real estate brokers in the city.

Most of the properties listed with Mr. Merrill are inside or business properties, and at the present time he has a well-selected list of desirable pieces located in the district between San Pedro street and the Arcade station, a district which is rapidly coming to the front as desirable business property. Values in this section are confidently expected to increase at phenomenal rates within the next twelve months.

Entire charge is taken of properties and interests placed in Mr. Merrill's hands and individual interests are given the most careful attention and consideration.

As president of the Los Angeles Realty Board, Mr. Merrill is among the most active of that organization's members, and was chairman of the first meeting ever held for the purpose of organizing the board. He was elected to the presidency some three months ago. As a member of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange Mr. Merrill serves a large clientele, handling all of the local stocks and bonds.

PROPERTY EXCHANGES.

By C. W. Conway.

Many an eastern man coming to California for the first time, on merely a pleasure trip, is so favorably impressed with the climatic advantages and business opportunities awaiting him here that he frequently returns to his eastern home to dispose of his interests there and return to Southern California. Many another man would like to do the same, but in some instances, on account of the slow sale for eastern property is prevented from joining his more fortunate brother in the sunny southwest. As a happy medium for those so situated, C. W. Conway has been an important factor in the upbuilding of Los Angeles and this section of the State. In a recent interview he referred in a laughing way to his "missionary work," along these lines, but the truth of the matter is, he has probably done more along these lines than many agencies generally accredited with a greater influence.

For over eight years he has maintained offices in the Bradbury building, always operating individually, while his mail business has assumed proportions during certain seasons of the year that would do credit to a mail order house, rather than to a real estate broker. Mr. Conway was one of the charter members of the Los Angeles Realty Board, and has served upon the governing committee since its organization. He believes that this is the day of specialists and has confined his efforts to the one line of exchanges since commencing to operate in this city, making a specialty of exchanging California property for eastern, and vice versa. Those who have experience know that it is at times very difficult to move eastern property for cash, at a figure that the owner would be willing to accept, therefore, it is easier to exchange the same, and many are the instances Mr. Conway recalls of deals that have proven advantageous to both parties of the transaction. It frequently happens that through the death of a member of the family or for business reasons, parties who have acquired property in California with the intention of becoming permanent residents, desire to return East, and dispose of their California interests for those nearer their former home. While his deals are frequently of small pieces of property, in some instances they attain most interesting proportions. For instance, a recent exchange he effected involved a $125,000 orange grove, located between Pomona and Claremont, in the heart of the orange belt, for a stock farm in Minnesota and some city property in the same State. Another interesting deal he consummated was the exchange of a beautiful $60,000 flat in Chicago for some improved and unimproved land at Covina. These instances serve to show the variety of changes and exchanges made.

Mr. Alfred Dolge, the founder of Dolgeville, this State, shortly after becoming a resident of Southern California, purchased, through Mr. Conway, the beautiful Fair Oaks rancho, located about four miles northeast of Pasadena, for $93,000. These and many other deals quite as interesting are among the number Mr. Conway has made during his period of "missionary work" in the interests of Los Angeles and this section of the State. His lists of proerty embrace holdings in every State in the Union, from Maine to the Pacific Coast.

PETERS AND WEBSTER.

The past few years has witnessed in Southern California one of the most remarkable movements of real estate this section of the country has ever seen. About three years ago the firm of Peters & Webster was formed, and both members of the firm, having had an extended experience in realty business in this city and section of the State, and great faith in the continued growth and development of the country, immediately decided upon a business campaign that was made possible by the particular conditions existing here, in making exchanges of property their exclusive business. They have met with gratifying success, and have a list of clients throughout Southern California that is constantly increasing.

The great bulk of their business is exchanging city for country property, and vice versa. While houses and lots and every conceivable line is effected through their agency, no two being exactly alike, aside from local exchanges the firm does an extensive business as well in effecting exchanges of eastern and for California property.

Since the organization of the Los Angeles Realty Board the members of the firm have been identified with every forward movement of that body of sterling realty brokers. The offices, on seventh floor of the Herman W. Hellman building, are well appointed and exceptional facilities are enjoyed for the attending to the extensive correspondence which the nature of the business makes necessary.

WINTON & M'LEOD.

Have Sold $125,000 of Lots in Three Tracts Within Past Four Months.

Of the many causes to which Los Angeles and this section of the country owes its rapid development, none, after the consideration of its natural resources, is more important than the energy and business ability which characterizes the real estate men who are members of the Los Angeles Realty Board. The growth of the city within the past few years has been so great that many new tracts have been opened up and quickly disposed of, and, within the past year, this firm has entered this most inviting field with gratifying results.

Among the first of the tracts placed upon the market was the Figueroa Boulevard tract, No 1, which was started about ten months ago with fifty lots in the tract. At the present time one lot remains unsold. This beautiful tract is located on aristocratic Figueroa street, just west of Forty-third street and lots 50x135 feet in size were offered at $500 up. Twenty houses are now built on the tract and most of the purchasers were home builders. One month later they opened up Figueroa Boulevard tract, No. 2. Fifty lots were offered for sale with building restrictions of $1300. Prices were fixed to start at $650 and up and now six months later $1150 is asked, showing a most handsome profit for those who purchased at the original figures. Three lots are all that remain unsold in the second tract and eighteen houses have been built.

The first of June Winton & McLeod secured another piece of acreage at Figueroa and Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth streets, and decided upon a price of $750 to open with. Prices are now $850. The Ware Villa tract has building restrictions of $2000 and many of the purchasers are building homes on the property.

A third addition to Figueroa Boulevard tract consisting of 136 lots has just been opened up further down Figueroa street between Sixtieth and Sixty-second street. Reservations can now be made at $450. Trees have been planted in front of each lot and a clover lawn between the curb and the six-foot walk extends the entire length of the tract. Fifteen new houses are now under contract for this location.

Their Figueroa and Moneta Avenue tract will be placed on the market at once, and reservations are now being made for it. There are but fifty lots in the property and already houses have been contracted for. All of their property is improved by five-foot cement walks and curb, and the streets are oiled and graveled. They have sold $127,000 worth of lots in this district within the past four months and the demand is steadily increasing.

As members of the Los Angeles Realty Board the firm's members are alive to the best interests of that organization and take an active part in promoting its welfare.

BOWEN & DOLTON SOLD

Over 1000 Home-sites Within Fifteen Months.

The average stranger in Los Angeles can see at a glance the activity in the building movement now in progress, but it is safe to say that they do not appreciate the extent of the real estate movement. The number of transfers and sales in a single month runs into the hundreds of thousands, and this one firm alone has sold within the past fifteen months over one thousand residence lots in their various tracts and subdivisions, in fact they have disposed of more lots than the average town of 5000 population contains.

While the firm of Bowen & Dolton has been formed within the past year, both members have been identified with the realty market of this city for a number of years. The firm has made a specialty of subdivisions in the past two years, and during that time have launched a number of ventures, every one of which has proved a decided success to the firm and a profitable venture for the purchasers.

One of the features of the manner in which they handle their work is the expense expended in making the improvements upon their tracts. Another feature, is the fact that of the twelve big tracts either placed on the market or being prepared for sale not one of them is outside the city limits; in two exceptions the acreage is exceptionally large portion of the tracts do run outside the line, but they are, however, in a desirable location.

Since the first of July, 190[4], the time the Main & Figueroa tract was placed on the market, the firm has disposed of lots valued at $470,000. Following closely No. 1 was a second Main & street tract opened up the ond of the following Dec No. 3 known as the Main St vard was placed on sale in the month. So great was the lots in these most desirable that a second boulevard tract, Tract No. 4 was opened within a few months from that of the fifth property to be improved, called the Royal tract and at Figueroa and Forty-second. This was placed on sale last and together with the Figueroa Tract (No. 6) was all disposed of the first of the present month, with the exception of a very few lots in the earlier properties. The latest, the opening of the Vernon & Avenue tract on the first of the month.

With a confidence born of a knowledge into the affairs of the business world, Mr. Bowen is now planning to improve four more pieces of acreage, Tract No. 9 comprising forty-seven acres located at avenue near the Long Beach line and Tract No. 10 comprising fifty-one acres near Vernon and ton avenue. It is interesting in this connection, that a great many of the purchasers of Bowen & lots have been home builders than speculators, and while the made in many instances profits Mr. Bowen states that not one among the number could sell at an advance of from 100 per cent. on the original Over in East Los Angeles, two of acreage, one of thirty-five other of eleven acres are now prepared for the market last of the famous "twelve

While Mr. Bowen devotes his time and attention to the end of the business, Mr. Dolton after the semi-business secretary of the San Pedro provement Association he ful in using his influence with the Council to have San Pedro street as far as Jefferson street.

ARE YOU AWARE OF THE FACT that 90 per cent. of Eastern visitors rush through to Southern California, some of them locating, and afterward discovering that the central and northern portion of the State is the more ideal farming country than the land of sunshine and oranges in the south. Many people, after buying in the south, dispose of their holdings and remove to Central California, where they become permanent residents.
TAKE THIS TIP,
and visit Central California before you buy. Values here are not inflated, climate is better, soil more productive, good crops raised without irrigation; besides around San Francisco Bay is the center of Western industry and commerce, and values will advance in greater proportion than any place in the United States.
WE HAVE FOR SALE
country lands of every description at low prices and easy terms. Write us, stating what you want, and we will furnish you with descriptions.

OCEAN PARK.

THE CITY OF HOMES.

Perhaps the most attractive and most interesting features which catch the eye of the visitor at Ocean Park is the long avenues of hundreds and hundreds of homelike residences; neat, cosy, well-kept and many of them pretentious. It has been said, and surely verified, that no other city in California can boast of such a uniformly high standard in its homes. The architecture is pleasing and of a comfortable type. A great many of the houses are occupied by business men of Los Angeles, who live in Ocean Park the year round. This town is noted for its high character and social tone. Informal hops at the Country Club, regular dances in the pavilion, are pleasures in which the young people never tire. Have you visited lately the Robbins Realty Co.? They rank among the leading representatives of real estate, loan and insurance companies of Ocean Park. They handle both Ocean Park and Venice property. They are accounted among the foremost business men in that community, always ready to forward any and all projects that have for their aims the advancement of the beach district. They have just recently opened an office in Santa Monica on the corner of Utah ave. and Ocean Front. They will be pleased to show you all the good values at Santa Monica. 15

SANTA MONICA.

UNEXCELLED BATHING AT SANTA MONICA.

How many people truly realize and appreciate a good dip in the surf at this time of the year? You say "the water is too cold;" that is where you are mistaken. Go to Santa Monica, where at any time during the winter you will find the temperature of the surf to be 62 deg. There is no greater sport. It will drive the blues away, and make you take a new lease on life. Santa Monica has made many new improvements to her town, and it is today an ideal spot to live in. Here the flowers bloom and are beautiful the whole year round. Climate all that one could ask for. The town is comparatively free from dust. All the streets are carefully oiled. Sanitary conditions first-class.

Schools unexcelled. Church of almost every denomination. Out door sports are fine. There is nothing left you to do but visit Santa Monica and see and learn for yourself what a lovely place it is. Her public-spirited citizens will leave nothing undone that will tend to add anything to their already beautiful town. All the electric cars that leave Los Angeles for Santa Monica these days are crowded with sight-seers. It is safe to say no one comes away disappointed, but rather singing her praises. 15

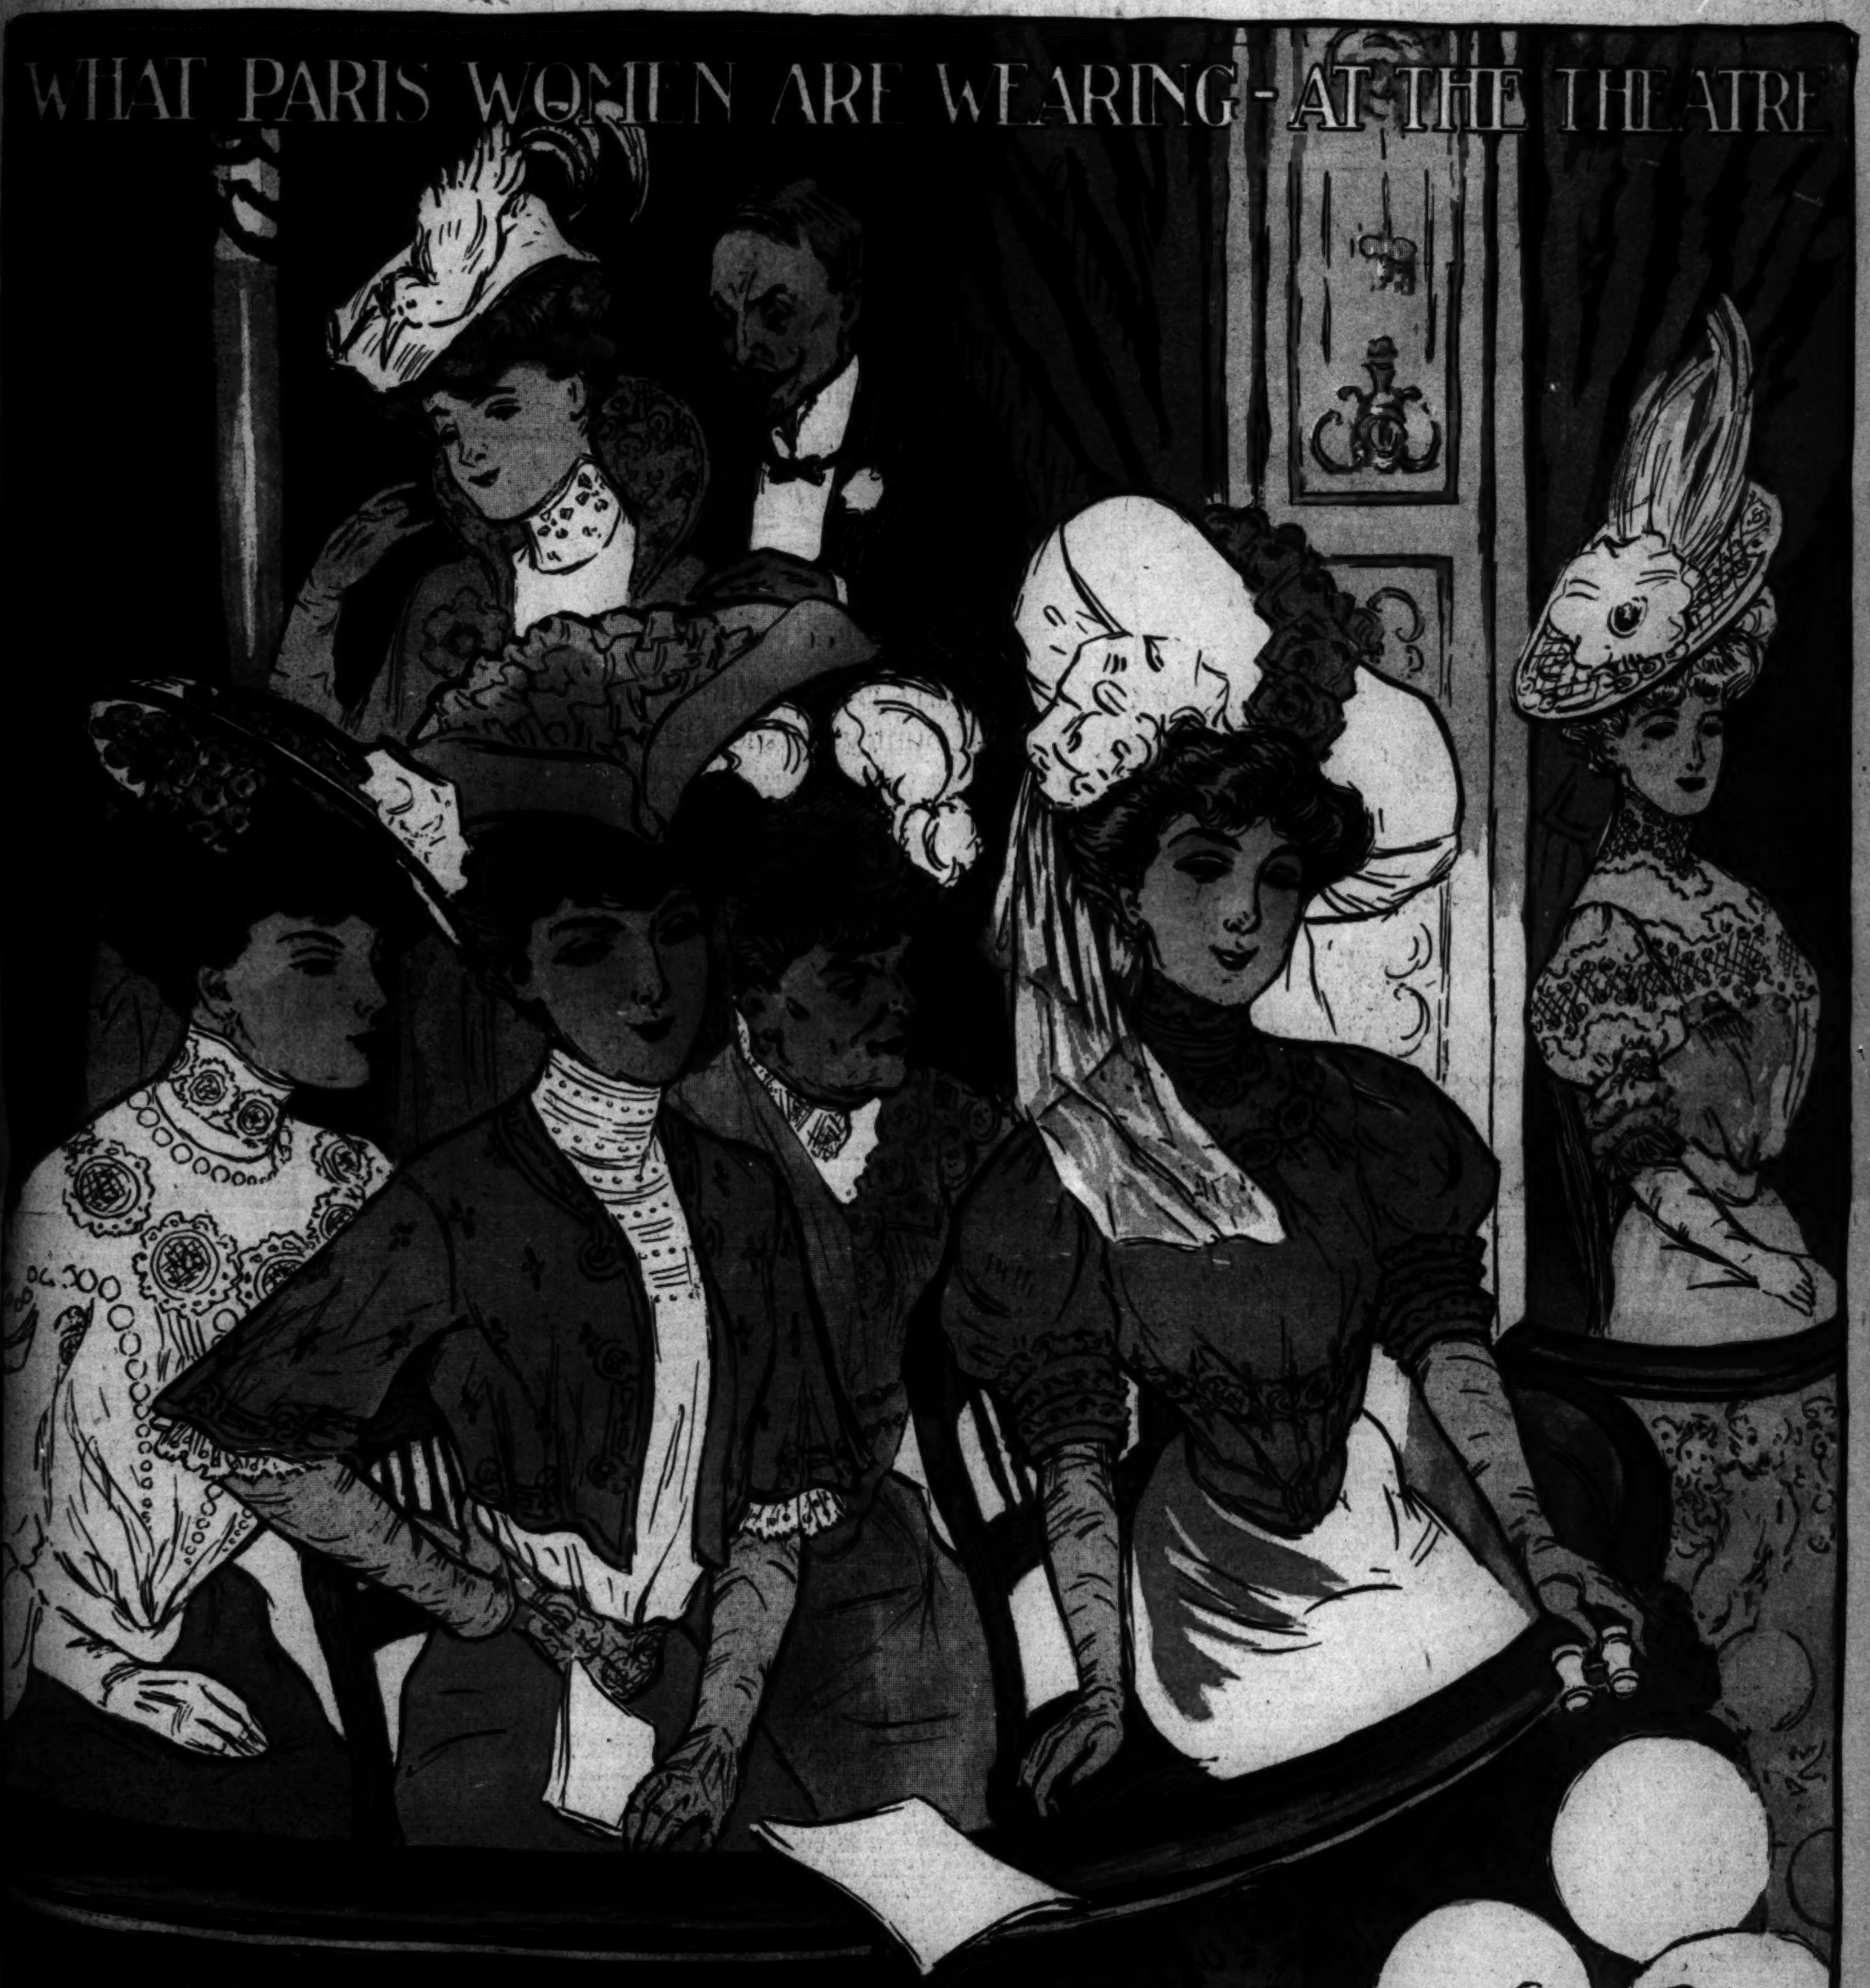
WHAT PARIS WOMEN ARE WEARING—AT THE THEATRE



A PARISIENNE at the theatre is at her very best in all her wonderful ability for effect. Her box shall be the cynosure of all eyes, her costume shall be the success of the occasion. She is determined upon that. Little of this is betrayed by her manner, or by the studied simple harmony of her costume. Her exquisite coiffure, her becoming collar, her perfectly fitting gloves, her well defined figure—all these little details, rather than a great outlay of money, make a French woman what she is. For the average woman of position here spends not more than $350 a year on her clothes.

Though the verdict of "Madame la Mode" is followed in a general way, each woman adapts, adds a little here, takes off a little there, until her costume is a part of herself. Yet she follows more or less closely the styles of one of the four periods (generously decreed by the great coutourieres)—the Empire, second and first, Louis XV and Louis XVI.

Delicate shades are greatly used, sky blue and another blue so soft that in certain lights it is palest green; maize or Naples yellow and, newest and loveliest, flesh-color pink.

Crepe de chine, lace, chiffon, everything soft and clinging is chosen for blouses. Often two filmy layers of chiffon are charmingly combined, white over color, leaving the merest suggestion of tint. There are designs rich enough in handwork to be worth a king's ransom beside others in which a few rows of lace insertion fastened in place by a tiny garland of embroidery forms the only trimming. Blouses follow the new figure in shape, higher bust, and longer lines from waist to shoulder. They are drawn down smoothly, or with a very slight puff above the girdle, which, by the way, is about six inches deep and of different color and material from the blouse.

Then there are those little separate jackets to slip on over your blouse. Quite different from anything we've had. You could put them into your pocket like a soft handkerchief, for they are made of liberty satin inside and out, sprinkled all over with tiny hand-worked flowers; forget-me-nots or old rose, perhaps, with a lining matching the flowers.

For an old woman a beautiful but simple model is of black chiffon banded with black lace (lines are circular rather than straight), to which a little yoke and sleeves trimmed of richest white lace give just that characteristic French touch of becomingness. This has elbow sleeves like the rest—there isn't a long-sleeve blouse in Paris.

Gloves to match your blouse are most effective, because the unbroken line of color gives such a long graceful arm—since sleeves are much smaller.

Hats are larger and more picturesque. The coiffure which supports them is also much larger, with its beautiful ondulation and high "bun" of curls and puffs. Hats have less slant than last season, though they are raised up by bandeaux which go all around the crown.

Last winter's hats can easily be remodeled (it wasn't till spring those tiny hats reached us), for every sort of material is used—velvet, soft French felt, cut beaver, lace threaded with gold or silver, etc. Flowers, ostrich tips, aigrettes, frills—everything but plumes seem to figure in the works of art fashioned by the great designers.

Blouse collars have a most important change. They are still soft and transparent, but bound very high at the sides and back.

DESCRIPTIONS OF COSTUMES

UPPER FIGURE—Velvet toque with paradise bird. Cloak with new Medici collar of heavy lace.

Second—Cut beaver hat with satin ribbon quilling. Ostrich tips under brim. Soft satin jacket with hand-embroidery worn over entire blouse.

Third—Black chiffon bodice with black lace bands and a white yoke. Black tulle bonnet with white ostrich tips and white chiffon ties.

Fourth—Crepe de chine bodice with bands of lace held in place by silk embroidery. Felt hat with a garland of roses and chiffon scarf.

Fifth—Hat of lace threaded with gold. Aigrette and tulle trimming. Bodice of chiffon and lace, the lace threaded with gold.

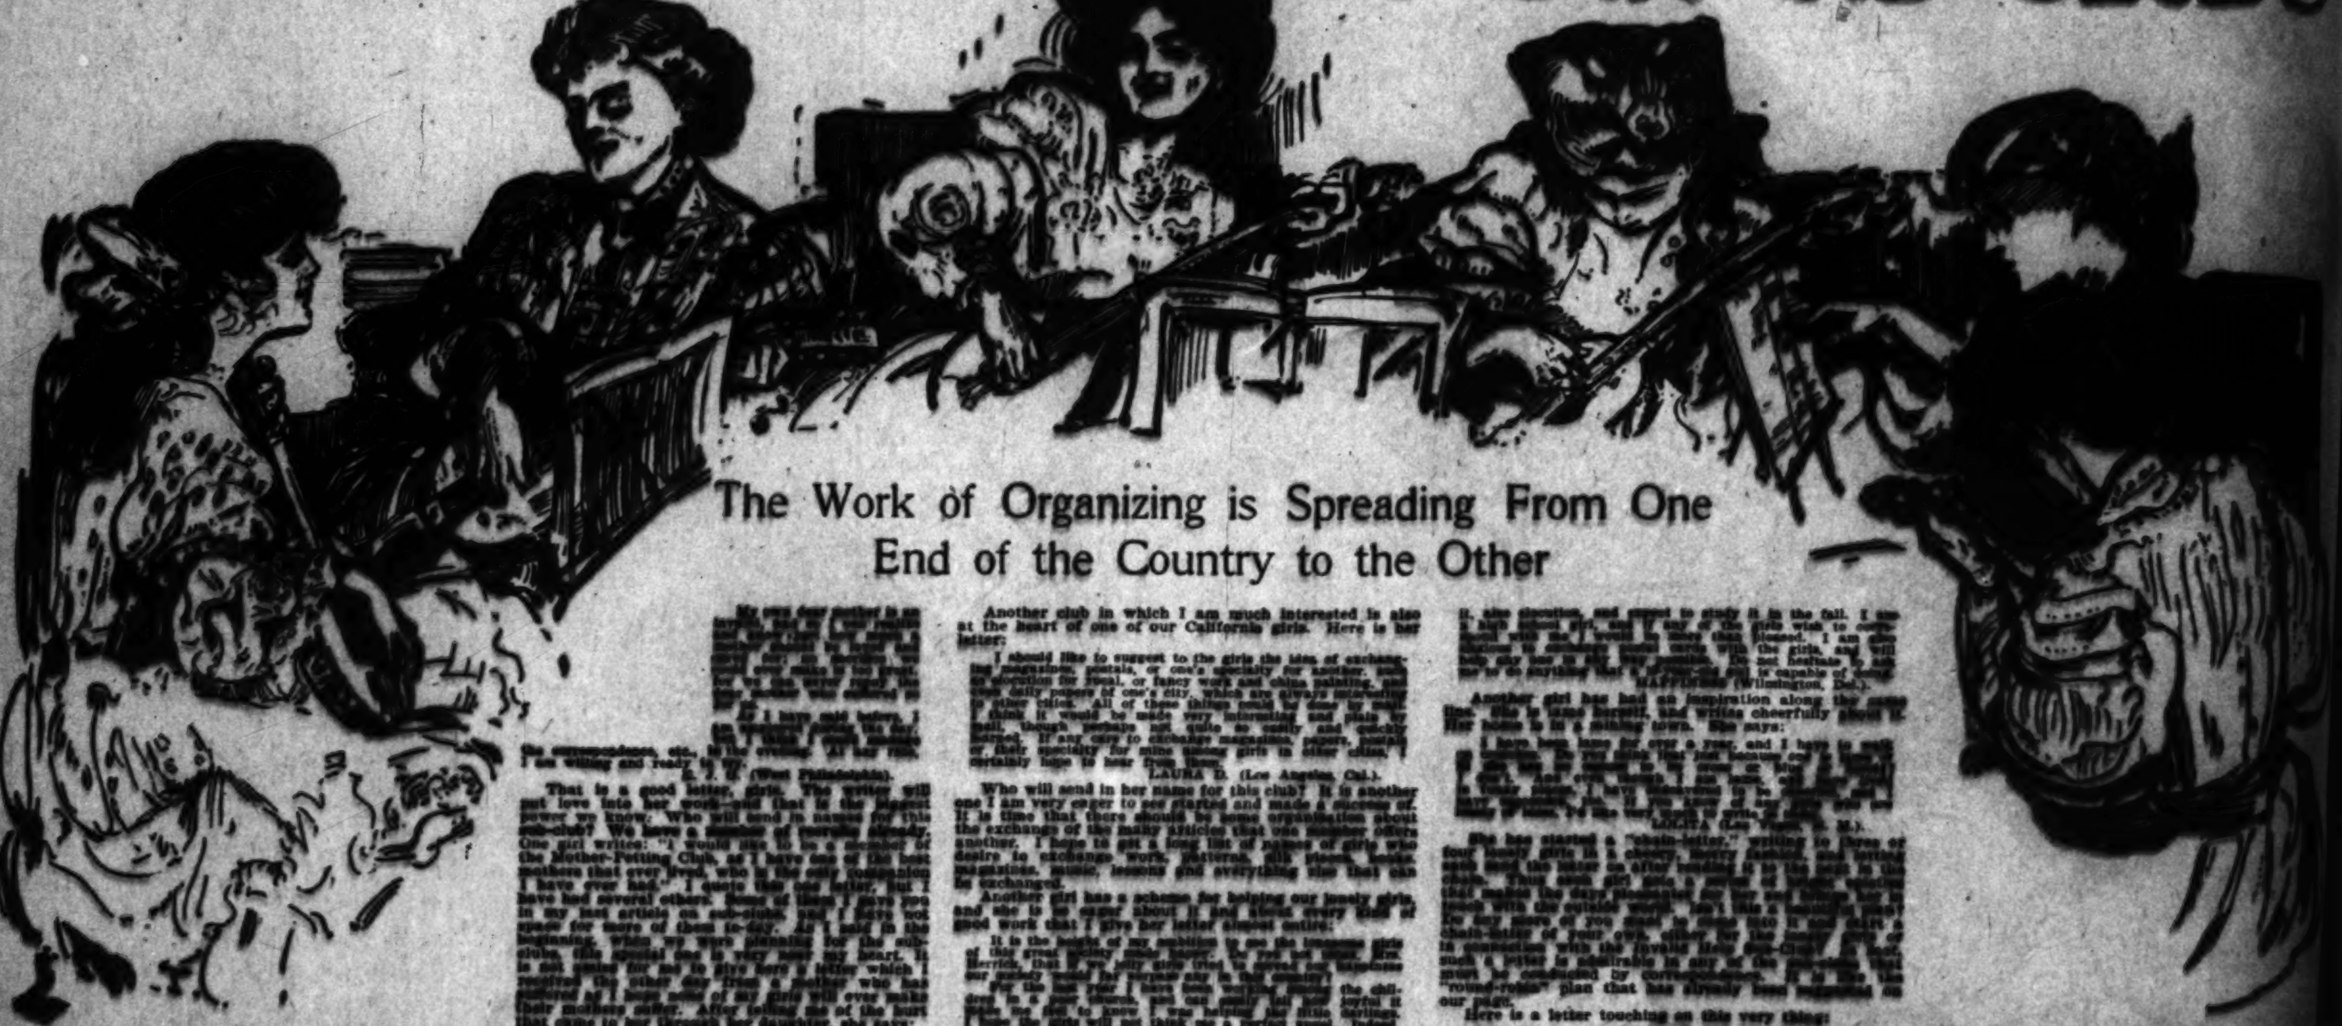
ANOTHER TALK ABOUT OUR SUB-CLUBS



The Work of Organizing is Spreading From One End of the Country to the Other

THIS is going to be another sub-club talk to-day. [illegible] Have you any idea how fast these same sub-clubs are growing? Not a mail fails to bring [illegible] "CLUBS" is filling so rapidly that I think I shall have to give another one to this subject.

You know, we had a talk a few weeks ago about certain of the sub-clubs, and I printed the reports from several of them. Since then I have appointed a chairman for the Mother-Petting Club, and here is part of her letter in reply to me:

For some time ago I have thought how delightful a [illegible] sub-club would be; but I think the Mother-Petting Club so much more suited to me that I have decided to go into it heart and soul, and I am willing [illegible] with your advice and the aid of the girls to become the chairman.

[illegible] my service and best [illegible] to the aid of this noble purpose.

My own dear mother is an invalid [illegible]

As I have said before, I [illegible] the correspondence, etc., in the evening. At any rate, I am willing and ready to try. E. J. K. (West Philadelphia).

That is a good letter, girls. The writer will put love into her work—and that is the biggest power we know. Who will send in names for this sub-club? We have a number of recruits already. One girl writes: "I would like to be a member of the Mother-Petting Club, as I have one of the best mothers that ever lived, who is the only companion I have ever had." I quote this one letter, but I have had several others. Some of them I gave you in my last article on sub-clubs, and I have not space for more of them to-day. As I said in the beginning, when we were planning for the sub-clubs, this special one is very near my heart. It is not easy for me to give here a letter which I received the other day from a mother who has suffered as I hope none of my girls will ever make their mothers suffer. After telling me of the hurt that came to her through her daughter, she says:

May I say a word to your girls?

Dear girls, should you ever contemplate leaving your [illegible] the mother who has sacrificed and always will, willingly, sacrifice anything and everything for you, [illegible] but don't, oh, don't leave her to grieve out her very life for the daughter who should be her consolation.

You don't know what hopes your mother has for your future, girls; try not to be the great a disappointment to her, [illegible] Mothers and daughters were never made to live apart. Cherish your mother's love, for in all the world there is no love like it. K. L. B.

I think this letter may give some of you suggestions of your duty to your mothers, and may increase your desire to spread the work of the Mother-Petting Club. Send in your names to me, and I will forward them to the chairman of this club, or, if you prefer, I will give you her address and you can write to her directly. I hope each of you will be prepared to give her some report of the ways in which you try to make life easier for your own mother.

Another club in which I am much interested is also at the heart of one of our California girls. Here is her letter:

I should like to suggest to the girls the idea of exchanging magazines, postals, or one's specialty for another, such as elocution for vocal, or fancy work and china painting, and then daily papers of one's city, which are always interesting to other cities. All of these things could be done by mail. I think it would be made very interesting and plain by mail, though perhaps not quite so easily and quickly learned. If any care to exchange magazines, papers, postals or their specialty for mine among girls in other cities, I certainly hope to hear from them. LAURA D. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Who will send in her name for this club? It is another one I am very eager to see started and made a success of. It is time that there should be some organization about the exchange of the many articles that one member offers another. I hope to get a long list of names of girls who desire to exchange work, patterns, silk pieces, books, magazines, music, lessons and everything else that can be exchanged.

Another girl has a scheme for helping our lonely girls, and she is so eager about it and about every kind of good work that I give her letter almost entire:

It is the height of my ambition to see the lonesome girls of this great society made happy. Do you not agree, Mrs. Herrick, that if we jolly girls tried to spread our happiness [illegible]

For the last year I have been working among the children in a poor church, and can easily tell how joyful it makes me feel to know I was helping the little darlings. I hope the girls will not think me a perfect angel. Indeed, I am far from it. This child believes in having a good time, and a great part of my vacation is spent in hunting fun (real fun).

Some of the girls have spoken about music and some elocution. I understand a great deal about music and love it, also elocution, and expect to study it in the fall. I am a high school girl, and if any of the girls wish to correspond with me I would be more than pleased. [illegible] help any one in any way possible. Do not hesitate to ask me to do anything that a [illegible] girl is capable of doing. HAPPINESS (Wilmington, Del.).

Another girl has had an inspiration along the same line. She is lame herself, and writes cheerfully about it. Her home is in a mining town. She says:

I have been lame for over a year, and I have to walk [illegible] LOLITA (Las Vegas, N. M.).

She has started a "chain-letter," writing to three or four lonely girls in a chain, [illegible] such a letter is admirable in any of the sub-clubs that must be conducted by correspondence. It is like the "round-robin" plan that has already been suggested on our page.

Here is a letter touching on this very thing:

I am forming a writing club and want to tell you my plan, so my letter can [illegible] BACHELOR GIRL SECOND (Edgewood Park, Pa.).

Who wishes the address of "Bachelor Girl Second" or of "Lolita"? I have them both at your command, if you will send me a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

I am taking up too much room with my sub-clubs, but I must put in the report of one that is yet to be conducted by correspondence. It came to me only a little while ago from Lowell. The writer says:

Dear President:

The girls here in Lowell have started a sub-club, their object being to follow closely the rule that is printed on our membership card. We want very few rules or [illegible] ELEANOR [illegible]

Do you see how the work spreads—girls' clubs and chains from Pennsylvania, Delaware, Nevada and Massachusetts. [illegible] about the sub-clubs, Canada, [illegible] Who will send more reports from new places? Now for Each and All.

Christine Terhune H

"EACH AND ALL" MEANS "HELP"

"EACH AND ALL." It means we each do our best toward helping ourselves and our neighbors toward the better living of our lives. The little badge of the society is an encouragement to those who see it; it arouses comment among those who have never seen it before, and in a way that leads more girls into the "Each and All" Society. How many girls can afford them that aren't wearing them? The cost is 50 cents—just what they cost the society, and we should like to have fifty of these badges in every city on this continent.

Each and All Talk With the President

ALL of you girls know how deeply I am interested in the Los Angeles sub-club, about which I wrote [illegible] a fine start, and I shall not be satisfied until all the Los Angeles girls are in it. I repeat the request "Mignonette," the chairman, made at the first—that all girls who wish to join the club should send to me a self-addressed postal card, which I will then send to "Mignonette," in order that she may write to the new member and tell her of an appointed place of meeting. I print below a cluster of letters from Los Angeles girls who have written enthusiastically about the new idea. These are only a few of the many letters I have received, but they will give some idea of the "go" that animates the California girl when she is interested. And I am as eager as any of them!

I think "Mignonette's" idea is great, and I shall do all in my power [illegible] DOLLY (Alhambra, Cal.).

[illegible] IMOGEN (Los Angeles).

What a dear, jolly girl "Mignonette" must be! How anxious I am to attend that first meeting of the club! I have not met any of the Los Angeles "Each and All" yet, but I hope I shall soon.

What a splendid opportunity our society offers for making friends! We girls, all of us, can have friends in every State in the Union and in Canada, too. We can all be just one great, great, big buzzing bee.

What about the fund that was to be started for the girls who could not afford their pins? I should be glad to help as much as I could.

I wonder if any of the girls know how to make pretty clothes hangers like this: Buy a common wire hanger and cover it with cotton wadding on both sides—the wadding should be scented with sachet powder. Then cover it with pretty ribbon four inches wide, shirred on lengthwise, leaving a small frill all around the edge. The hook is then bound also with narrow ribbon and finished with a bow. These hangers make pretty, as well as useful, little gifts. SEVENTEEN (Los Angeles).

I wish we had such enthusiasts in every city in the Union and in Canada!

I am 17 years old, attend the high school, and am very much interested in your page. I play the violin, and would like to correspond with some girl of my age who is interested in the violin. L. M. D. (Rockland, Mass.).

I know we have other violin players in the club. Will they not send for "L. M. D.'s" address?

I have thought of an idea for quite a long time, and this is [illegible] I would like to get a club of about a hundred girls, or [illegible] could try it anyway. [illegible] and after we have enough [illegible] could give socials and entertainments [illegible] could help lots of poor people [illegible] without food and clothes [illegible] What a helping hand [illegible] Besides this, the girls could have [illegible] and if we succeed in [illegible] things that we do. For instance, [illegible] learn to cook. I would be glad to teach any girl. I can cook, do fancy work, paint and many other [illegible] We could, also, have reading [illegible] very interesting, and they [illegible] We could have a sewing club [illegible] who are interested in drawing. There are hundreds of things a person can do to help other people.

There are no clubs in Harrisburg that I know of like the idea [illegible] just think what we could do—wonderful things, not only for ourselves, but others! Don't let your hands and heart lie idle; let us be awake to the [illegible] all need a helping hand sometimes.

And, as I said before, look at the poor children who go to school with hungry faces and their hands and bodies exposed to the cold winter air. What a lot of good a club like this could do! Now, girls from all around and from Harrisburg, let us go, each and all, and try and make this club a success. Girls, from 14 years up, come and let us hear from you with your good advice and ideas. Let me make this the first club in our city or State.

I would be glad to hear from any one who thinks this a good idea, and will try to make it a good, ideal club to help the poor children whose minds and hearts are hungry for the love which some of them never get at home. Some of them don't know what a kind word is. I am sure we could help them. Now, girls, try. I am willing to do whatever I can for anybody. J. F. R. (Harrisburg, Pa.).

I print this plea almost at full length, in the hope that it may be promptly seconded by the Harrisburg girls. I know we have some good workers among them, and I shall be glad to receive any answers I can to "J. F. R's." appeal.

The two following letters are on a topic that interests many of our girls:

I am to live in Boston this winter, and I want to suggest a plan. Cannot the Each and Alls have a small orchestra? If we met only for practice, it would help those musically inclined, as well as make a social evening.

I am quite capable in music, and could help any one interested. I suggest a mandolin club, as many girls play mandolin or guitar.

If it meets with your approval, I hope to hear. E. P. F. (West Springfield, Mass.).

I am interested in a musical club composed of a few of the Sunday school teachers where I attend church. There are, I should say, forty in it, including myself.

Most of the girls play the mandolin, a few the guitar, [illegible]

I would like to correspond with some of the members. MAY S. (Lowell, Mass.).

These letters contain valuable suggestions for the musical members. I have the addresses of both girls.

I would be very glad to join a club for the purpose of [illegible] IVY E. T. [illegible]

The club idea grows daily. Surely, there are some of our gymnasium enthusiasts who would like this correspondent's address:

I hardly know of what particular benefit I can be to any one in the club, just at present, but I'm willing, and perhaps an opportunity will present itself ere long. Surely I can prove the truthfulness of my assertion.

Writing is my hobby. I'm just another would-be. I have done a good bit of newspaper work, a little advertising, and have turned out some few creditable short stories; but I'm not do well enough to satisfy either myself or editors-at-large. I am now taking a course in ad writing, because I believe it will bring quicker results, and I hope to secure a position soon.

I would be delighted to hear from others interested in my line, and would gladly welcome and pass along any good suggestions relating to same.

I am still a girl, though married, am ambitious and desirous of assisting "the only man," who has had any amount of hard luck financially, in getting a start in the world. W. H. (Pittsburg).

We have other literary aspirants, who might help "W. H." or be helped by her.

I should like to become a member of your society, with a view of forming new acquaintances in California. I expect to spend the winter there, and have neither friends nor acquaintances in that section. I am a member of the Pittsburg branch of the Young Woman's Christian Association. I should like correspondents in southern California, who could give me information in regard to rooms, boarding, etc., as my means are limited, and I should like to live as economically as possible. Will you kindly give my address to any one willing to assist me in this matter? L. J. P. (New Stanton, Pa.).

Will not some of our California girls respond to this appeal?

I see so many girls speak of being lonely, and if you will send me the address of some of them, I can write them and try and cheer them up a little. If they are like me, nothing would cheer them so much as a letter from a distance telling new sights and scenes. MILDRED (Campion, Col.).

What lonely girl wishes the address of this friendly soul?

Please find inclosed stamps for my pin, which I shall wear as the order of Masons wear theirs, and as "Mrs. E. A. J.," of Waltham, Mass., says: "Let the password be, 'Can I help you?'"

"Mignonette's" idea for a sub-club is just my own, only I am not accomplished in any way, but am willing to learn everything that is helpful. If there should be such generous offer from Lowell, I for one will improve the opportunity. If I can do anything to help another member, count on me. Mrs. R. M. (Lowell, Mass.).

I wish with all my heart sub-clubs according to "Mignonette's" plan could be formed in Lowell and everywhere else. Who will start the next one?

I will be so glad to exchange books with "Laura." I also have a large quantity of books, magazines, etc., which I will cheerfully send to any member of our club who will write to me and send postage at the rate of [illegible] cents a pound for papers and [illegible] cents for books. I live in the land of persimmons and chinkapins. I will gladly send any of our readers a box of either, or both, if they will write to me and send a dime for postage. I want to find some way to earn money to help a poor woman who is trying to earn a living for herself and seven little children. She also has an invalid husband to work for. I do her writing and sew a little for her, but she needs more substantial aid. I am chairman of a club of five. I have three quilts I hope to sell for our society. We also have a large bed of white jessamine root and old-fashioned red lilies, and will be glad to send any of our readers a root of each, postpaid, for [illegible] cents. I will be glad to correspond with any of our chairmen as to ways and means of helping others. M. B. (Mason, Va.).

This is the correspondent who has been selling pine needles to help a poor family. Her address will be sent to any member who wishes it on receipt of a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

I am a lover of all kinds of sports, such as tennis, etc., and am jolly and enjoy having fun.

If some of the girls who are fond of such ways of pleasure will write to me, I would like it very much; also, if some of the girls who are "lonely" would write to me. [illegible] "Gloomy" and "Weary," who wrote in your page a few weeks ago, I think I could cheer them up in some ways. TODDY (Philadelphia).

Here is a chance to gain another member for the Philadelphia tennis club. Who wishes "Toddy's" address?

Here are two more letters that belong together:

I have no talent but cooking. I would be glad to teach any one who would like to learn how to cook. MARRIED GIRL (Philadelphia).

Won't you please give the girls my old idea for earning money? [illegible]

I am married, and as I would very much like to help a little financially, I wish that you could ask me. I would be very glad to relieve any mother of the care of her baby for an afternoon or evening for a small sum. I can do this, as I have had a dear little one of my own—a delicate child—so I understand what to do for the little mites.

Also, if any one would like to have a delicious mayonnaise, made with pure olive oil and eggs, I can supply same at a reasonable price. It will keep indefinitely, and is such a comfort to have on hand for unexpected company. Mrs. F. W. (Germantown, Pa.).

I will give "Mrs. F. W.'s" address to any one sending a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

I would like to receive orders for dinner menu or place cards, for tally cards or for daisy bead chains.

The cards are either pen and ink or water color. I would send samples and receive orders from any one who would wish them.

The daisy chains are either long or short lengths and are any color desired. If any one would wish to order any of them, I could send them samples of the chains in whatever color they desire, as well as the prices charged. PEN AND INK (Scranton, Pa.).

The time is here when tally cards and place cards will be needed, even more than in warm weather. Does any one wish the address of "Pen and Ink"?

I would like some young lady who is desirous of earning a little pin money and is able to help a grown-up with arithmetic lessons, beginning at the multiplication table and teaching from there up to as far as the high school. It is for one who needs this knowledge in her work, and is too timid to go to night school. I would like to have some one who could come to my house, say two evenings a week, and bring her own school book, or use the one I have. The person is very apt and would be a willing scholar. If one hour could be spared twice a week, I think it would be nice work for some girl in a quiet, respectable private family. E. T. (Allegheny, Pa.).

"E. T." is not a member of "Each and All," and so I suppose I ought not, by rights, to put her application here. But I want to help, and I hope that when she sees this, she will send for a membership card, if she has not already done so, and become enrolled as a member, with all club privileges. I think this is an excellent opportunity for a high school girl to earn a little pin money, have some practice in her studies and lend a helping hand at the same time. I have "E. T.'s" address.

Correspondents' and Post Card Exchan

Addresses of postcard collectors will be given only to members of Each and All. Every application for an address must be accompanied by a stamped and self-addressed envelope.

I don't like to begin every week with a scolding, but I print here two letters that speak for themselves. The first has to do with the correspondents, the second with the postcard collectors. I heartily indorse the remarks of both correspondents, and I hope that the girls who have been careless, either about replying to letters or about returning postcards, will lay the matter to heart and turn over a new leaf forthwith. Such neglect of obligations will bring the club into disrepute and is surely a direct violation of the pledge of membership.

"October, a good blast,
To blow the hog acorn and mast."

Grandmother Westover's Story

"GRANDMA, won't you please tell us a story?" asked Ruth Westover. "It is such a horrid day, and we have nothing to do."

"I'll tell thee a story, my dear, and what would thee like me to tell about? Thee surely knows all my tales by this time."

"Oh, no, we don't; you always remember something lovely. I think you had the most wonderful time when you were a girl. I'll get the boys."

"[illegible] boys, grandma is going to tell us a story; hurry, quick!" shouted Ruth to her brothers and cousin in the attic [illegible].

[illegible] and a wild clattering of [illegible] on the big old polished stairway as [illegible] rushed down to the cheery [illegible] where grandma sat knitting.

"[illegible], you're a peach, sure," called [illegible] Louis, while Billy Westover gave the sweet old lady a hug that [illegible] her breath.

"[illegible], tell us about a bear," said [illegible] Ted Westover.

"[illegible] off, Ned, with your bears. [illegible] listen to him, Gramsie; give [illegible] something about Indians," interrupted Louis.

"[illegible] Indians are no good; tell us of [illegible]," cried Billy, who intended to [illegible] West Point.

"[illegible] boys, do thee not think, since [illegible] the only girl, it might be polite to give her the choice?" said grandma, smiling sweetly.

"[illegible], grandma, may I really choose? [illegible] tell us of the first time you met [illegible] Westover."

[illegible] pleased smile flitted across the old [illegible] face as she watched the children [illegible] themselves.

They Were Puritans

[illegible] Westovers and their cousin, [illegible] Louis, loved dearly to visit at [illegible] great-grandparents' farm; there [illegible] much to do and see; but perhaps best of all were grandmother's [illegible].

[illegible] Westover once had a fight with [illegible], Bob Taylor, about grand[illegible], and, though Billy came out of [illegible] with a black eye, he still [illegible] no one could equal Grandma [illegible].

[illegible] she sat up so straight in her [illegible] mahogany rocker. It would [illegible] hard to find a lovelier or [illegible] quaint old lady. Her silvery gray [illegible] white cap and kerchief [illegible] snowy hair and her merry [illegible] pink cheeks, which were [illegible] and fresh as a girl's.

"[illegible] to hear the first time [illegible] grandfather? It was [illegible] occasion.

"[illegible], I was something of a [illegible] in my youth, and my [illegible] felt I needed the discipline [illegible] life, so they sent [illegible] about seventeen to visit [illegible] great-grandfather, [illegible] Winthrop, in Maine.

"[illegible] people were not of our [illegible], were Puritans of a very [illegible] type. When my mother became [illegible] it made hard feeling, so I [illegible] either of my grand[illegible].

"[illegible] can imagine, I was much excited at the prospect of the visit. It [illegible] hard journey in those days, [illegible] and I went all the way [illegible], stopping in New Haven and [illegible] for little visits.

"[illegible] one Friday evening, we [illegible] Grandfather Winthrop's. It [illegible] cold, I remember, and his [illegible] out in the country, was a [illegible] white frame building, with [illegible], set down in the midst [illegible] grove of spruce trees.

"[illegible] greeted me some[illegible], I thought, though I found [illegible] was but their stern manner [illegible] they had most kind hearts.

"[illegible] day, I learned that my [illegible] Portland would not arrive [illegible], and I retired that night [illegible] aching heart.

[illegible] About Indians

"[illegible] day my dear father re[illegible], but for fear of of[illegible], I should have begged [illegible].

"[illegible] seemed the longest I ever [illegible]. I helped grandmother [illegible]. The evening was even [illegible] among the Puritans [illegible] First Day [illegible] at 6 o'clock Seventh Day, [illegible] read us a long and [illegible] of Cotton Mather, their [illegible].

"[illegible] morning grandfather and [illegible] meeting. Grandmother, who [illegible] on the farm.

"[illegible] said grandfather to her as [illegible] the fastening of the [illegible] consideration let in a [illegible] our return.'

"'What fear you, father?' she asked. 'Is there danger of an Indian outbreak?'

"'Scarcely, I think; but Neighbor Johnson says he heard the Pequods were on the warpath, and we cannot be too watchful.'

"We trudged a long way to meeting, and the walk must have been wearisome to grandfather, who I noticed carried his gun.

"The great log church was bitter cold, the service was long, and, save for being diverted by watching the janitor keep in order with his wand some restless boys on the back seats, I fear I should have disgraced myself falling to sleep during the discourse, which lasted two and a half hours.

"At the noon hour we gathered in the church yard with our lunch, and my grandfather made me acquainted with some lassies about my own age.

"I fear they thought little of my breeding, for I was busy trying to catch what the men were saying of the Indians. About Philadelphia there had been no red men for long years, and I wished much to see one.

A Fierce Fight

"After the noon hour service began again the minister was well in the fifthly of his second discourse, when a sudden noise at the door made me turn.

"There stood a great, clumsy boy of about 1[illegible], with the reddest face and the reddest hands and ears and hair I had ever seen. To make it worse, he wore a red wool comforter around his neck and a red knit cap on his head.

"'What a horrid, ugly lad,' thought I. What can his errand be?

"I was soon to know.

"Eluding the janitor, who tried to stop him, the boy ran down the aisle and gasped: 'The Indians! The Indians! They are but ten miles off!'

"Such turmoil as followed! The great bell in the meeting house clanged long and loud, and soon people came flocking in from all sides.

"My grandfather left me while he went to fetch my grandmother.

"While he waited, the boy told his tale.

"It seemed he had been tracking a great bear through the woods, and quite forgetful of the Sabbath, had just killed it after a hard fight, when he noticed smoke in the distance. Climbing a high tree, he saw a band of bedizened red men in their ominous dance of war. In a minute the boy was speeding through the woods to warn the country people for miles around.

"What a night that was! The meeting house was crowded to suffocation. Some of the children wept, the women prayed and the men stood alert, with their guns in hand, ready for an attack.

"From the windows could be seen the fierce blaze of burning farms, and ever and anon there sounded the horrid yell of the Pequod war whoop.

"At last the Indians came in sight, and I tell thee, my dears, though we Friends are a peace-loving people, I was glad of those Puritan guns.

"A fierce fight followed, with a great roar of musketry on both sides. What my sainted mother would have said I know not, but somehow my Quaker blood was on fire, and I found myself loading the gun of the red-headed boy who had brought the alarm.

Scattered by Soldiers

"Toward dawn it began to look very serious for us, as our powder was giving out, and the Indians seemed about to fire the meeting house.

"Suddenly a long, long bugle call sounded, and then another and another. "'The soldiers! The soldiers!' shouted the red-headed boy, who had mounted to the belfry and was scanning the landscape with anxious eye.

"In a moment, coming over Round Top Hill, a body of troops was seen, their guns glistening in the morning sun. It was the Old Guard of Bangor, dressed in the blue and buff of their Revolutionary sires.

"The Pequods, seeing themselves outnumbered, scattered suddenly into the surrounding woods.

"Thee can imagine our relief!

"Parson Endicott said: 'Before we separate to our homes, let us give thanks to Him who has protected us this night.'

"During that fervent prayer I doubt if there were a dry eye in that meeting house.

"Now, my dears, there is the supper bell, which I am sure must be a welcome sound to thee."

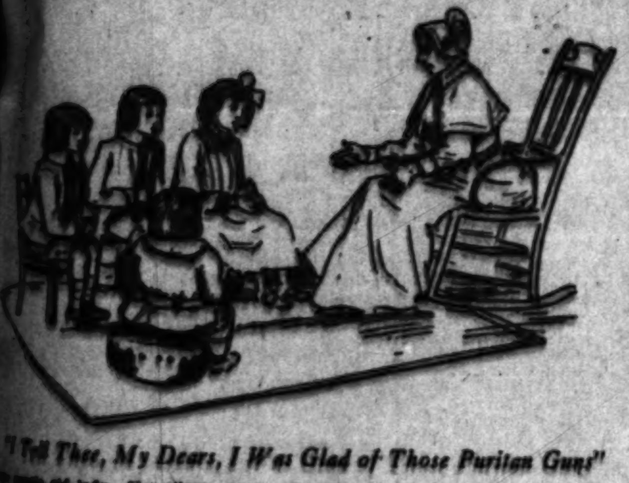
"Oh, grandma, what a splendid story!" cried little Ted. "And there was a bear in it, too."

"And Indians," said Louis.

"Well, there were soldiers, too," muttered Billy.

"Why, Grandma Westover, you never told us about meeting grandpa, after all," exclaimed Ruth.

"What about the ugly red-headed boy?" said grandma, with a merry smile. "Here comes thy grandfather, perhaps he can tell thee what was the name of that boy hero."



"I Tell Thee, My Dears, I Was Glad of Those Puritan Guns!"

Across the Pacific With Polly Evans

DEAR Boys and Girls: Sitting here on deck this delightful evening—Jacky and I—listening dreamily to the muffled chug! chug! chug! of the engines and the never-ceasing swish! swash! swash! swish! swash! swash! of the waters that our great bow is cleaving, it is hard for us to realize that only a short while ago we were back home where you are, spending the hot evenings on the porch.

"Don't you wish all your boys and girls could be here with us?" says Jacky.

Indeed, yes! But since that cannot be, this letter and those that follow it must give you the best story possible of our travels, so that you may imagine yourselves with us.

Have any of you ever seen Salt Lake City? Jacky and I visited there before we sailed. When we reached South Temple street and Jacky spied a great adobe wall, he said:

"That must be a penitentiary."

"No, it is the Mormon temple and tabernacle," explained Polly Evans.

We passed inside the gates, and Jacky wanted to go straight into the temple.

"Not there, Jacky," warned his auntie.

"Why not?" asked Jacky in surprise, and then Polly Evans explained to him how the Mormons never permit Gentiles (as people who are not Mormons are called) to go within their temple, and how the temple took forty years to build, and how the people met the immense cost of the building by paying tithes (which means one-tenth of all their yearly income or produce).

Lake Losing Its Water

While they were talking about these and many other interesting things in connection with the temple, Jacky and his auntie took their way into the huge tabernacle, which quite took Jacky's breath away.

"My, what a big, round place! And, oh, what a big, high roof—and not a single pillar to hold it up! How on earth does it stay up?" asked Jacky. And then he was very much interested in listening to Polly Evans' explanation of how the wise architect who built the round roof planned it with such a curve that it would hold itself up without the aid of pillars.

That night (Saturday) Polly Evans and Jacky went, with thousands of other people, to the lake. They were so surprised to find the big pavilion and bath houses almost a quarter of a mile away from the water.

"My, how queer!" exclaimed Jacky. At these words a kind old gentleman turned with a smile and said:

"Ten years ago, my boy, the water was six to ten feet deep under the pavilion. But since we have been diverting so many of our mountain streams (and he pointed as he spoke to the beautiful blue mountains to the east and the south) into the canals for irrigating our farm lands, this poor lake has been so much the loser, and has been steadily receding, till it is now as low as you see it, leaving our pavilion high and dry on the sand."

Jacky and his auntie lost no time getting into bathing suits and joining their friends in the water. The moment Jacky got into shoulder-deep water he was astonished to find his feet, of a sudden, bobbing to the surface of the water.

"Here, quick!" called somebody, at the same time catching his head up and holding his feet down. "Whew! You had a narrow escape from a nasty dose of this salt water in your nose and eyes, young man."

How to Swim There

So that was the way Jacky became acquainted with the wonderful buoyancy of the lake water, which is 2[illegible] per cent. salt. After that, the same young man who had saved him from the "nasty dose" taught him how to lie back in the water, with arms outstretched, and float. And, after a bit, we all formed a floating procession in the water—first, the young man, with his toes hooked under Jacky's armpits; then Jacky, with his toes similarly connected with Polly Evans' armpits; then this one and that one, till there were fifteen of us all in a row. Don't you wish you could have been one of us? It was great fun!

But enough of Salt Lake. In fact, there is no space now to tell you much about our visit to San Francisco.

You must be sure to notice the street cars when you visit San Francisco. Jacky and his auntie thought they were fine. They consist of a closed part in the middle, but in front and behind they are open, and have two long, lengthwise seats back to back, so that when you are seated you directly face the street. This made it easy for Jacky and his auntie to see a great deal of San Francisco while they were riding out to Golden Gate Park and Cliff House, where so many people go to see the seals on Seal Rock.

From this perch on the car they saw many amusing as well as interesting things. For instance, some of the signs on the shops. One of these signs was a flaring red one, about a dozen feet long, over a tiny two-by-four shop, and it read something like this: "January Jones, possibly not the best bootblack in California, but without doubt the bootblack of San Francisco." From which you see even the bootblacks are not backward about advertising their merits.

A Voyage With Missionaries

Well, sailing day came almost before Jacky and his auntie realized it. Then, my! what a busy morning they had of it. So many last-forgotten things that had to be purchased and delivered post-haste on board the steamer; a letter of credit to be procured from the banker; luggage to be properly labeled and transferred from hotel to steamer, etc., etc., etc. And dear, dear! things to be done piled up so high that by the time half of them were accomplished it was just about all Jacky and his auntie could do to catch the steamer at all. They got aboard just eight minutes before the gangplank was taken away.

And they found out later that some of the would-be passengers actually got left. All their luggage was on board, but they, poor things, probably reached the pier just in time to see us pulling out of the harbor.

As we slowly swung out from the pier the immense crowd of people who had come to bid us "bon voyage" began singing the hymn, "God be With You Till We Meet Again," and you don't know how beautiful it sounded to us as we drew farther and farther away and the voices grew softer and softer in the distance. We learned afterward that there were about thirty missionaries on our passenger list, going to different fields in Japan, Korea, China and the Philippines. Jacky made acquaintance very quickly with some of the missionaries' children, who told him strange stories about foreign lands that pretty nearly made his eyes pop out.

But before we had been many hours out of the Golden Gate Jacky found he had interests closer home than eye-popping stories about foreign lands, for we got into heavy seas, which soon caused poor Jacky to feel very ill.

But the following day found us in smoother waters, and by afternoon every one felt better and managed to get out on deck. Jacky brought up a trunk rope from the stateroom, and pretty soon he and some other little boys were galloping "like mad" up and down the hurricane and shelter decks, playing fire horses. They managed to tread on every testy old gentleman's pet toe, and get into everybody's way, more or less; but they were so nice about apologizing that everybody had to smile and say, "Don't mention it."

At 6 o'clock we had a real fire alarm—only it was not for a real fire, but only for a fire drill. My! but Jacky was excited! He and the other boys and girls were eating their supper in the saloon, when the big bell suddenly clanged the alarm. Quick as a wink, every John Chinaman of a steward dropped his dishes and tea towels and made a bee line for the nearest companionway leading to the hurricane deck, and tearing in their wake came Jacky and all the other boys and girls!

Very quickly the stewards and cookies and scullery boys and sailors formed in two long lines—one on each side of the ship—and, after a rapid inspection on the part of the officers, the word of command was given, and instantly the line broke into ten squads, which threw themselves upon the ropes of the ten life boats, and presto! in another minute every life boat was swinging free from the davits, ready for what may some day prove to be a real emergency! Another command and the squads ran into column lines, seized the ropes, and, to the tune of a peculiar sing-song Chinese air, set up a pull, a swing and a tug which soon brought the life boats back in their original position. And that ended the fire drill.

You noticed the words "Every John Chinaman of a steward," didn't you? Yes, pretty nearly every employe of the boat is a Chinaman. The first meal in the saloon Jacky could hardly eat for watching the solemn, silent Chinese stewards, with their queer, long blue robes and queerer queues hanging down from their smooth-shaven heads, with the ends tucked up in their pockets.

Every mealtime we found freshly printed menu cards with a post card top for us to tear off and [illegible].

If you will look at your map of the Pacific Ocean you can follow the course of our steamer from San Francisco to Honolulu. We left San Francisco Wednesday at 1 o'clock, and will reach Honolulu some time Sunday night. We will land early Monday morning. This is a "record run," the captain says. Divide [illegible] (miles) by [illegible] (days) and you will see what our average daily speed has been. Great, isn't it!

Jacky's Queer Bath

The first day out, ugh! it was cold. We put on our heaviest wraps and were glad of our steamer rugs besides. And Jacky was only too happy to join his auntie and a dapper little Japanese gentleman and a diplomat on his way to his post in games of shuffleboards so as to warm his chilly little bones.

The second day was not quite so cold. The third was very comfortable. Then the fourth day, when we had reached the 2[illegible]th degree latitude, we found ourselves very warm, and everybody got out white dresses and duck suits to wear.

Now the captain ordered a big tarpaulin tank to be set up on the lower forward deck and filled with sea water, so that all who wished might take a swim. He set the example by donning his bathing suit and diving into the water clear down from the hurricane deck. Then he spied Jacky gazing down from the rail, and he called out, "Jump in, Jacky!" And what do you suppose? Why, the little scamp jumped, and in he went, duck clothes, canvas shoes and all! Anybody but Polly Evans would have punished him for that performance. But it was only for once. Jacky wouldn't do it again. He much prefers a bathing suit.

In the next letter you will hear about our visit to the Hawaiian Islands. Good-bye till then. POLLY EVANS.

A New Kind of Lava.

LOUIS CAPEN was a 12-year-old pupil of a grammar school in one of our smaller American cities, who studied both geography and physiology. In the latter he was particularly interested in the effect of saliva on the digestive organs.

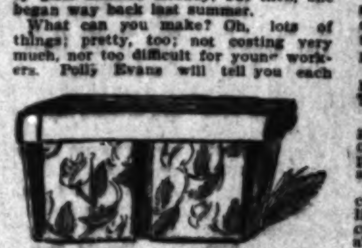
At his last examination one of the questions was: "What is a volcano?"

Louis wrote: "A volcano is a mountain that spits up saliva and drowns people."

Christmas Gifts to Make.

GIRLS, do you remember that Christmas is only a little more than two months away? Unless you want to be in a great rush at the last now is the time to get to work on your presents. If you begin early, you can make ever so much nicer things. One of Polly Evans' girls has half a dozen pretty gifts finished already, but then, she began way back last summer.

What can you make? Oh, lots of things; pretty, too; not costing very much, nor too difficult for young workers. Polly Evans will tell you each week some fine presents you can get ready for Christmas.



Do you wish something for mother or aunty? Why not make her a gift that will hold her work or knitting?

Perhaps you have an old round or oblong fruit basket at home. The edges may be broken, and they are terribly dirty—but no difference. Wash it well in a little salt water and dry in the sun, and you will be surprised how clean and fresh it looks. Or, if you prefer, you can paint it to match the trimming.

Now hunt in the patch box and see if you can find any remnants of that blue or pink (or any color you wish) canvas that was so popular for big sister's dress last summer. If you find a good-sized remnant, cut from it two pieces to fit the bottom and sides of your basket, shirring the latter a little.

Then take a bias strip, long enough to go around the rim of the basket and about four or five inches deep, sewing the ends together for a flounce. Finish this with a hem held by a cross-stitch border in some pretty contrasting color—for instance, on the pink use different shades of pink and a touch of black or white, and on the blue shades of navy blue or dull greens. This border can be as simple or elaborate as you like. It may be only a line or two of cross stitch to hold the hem, or, if you are fond of embroidering, it can be a deep band.

Sew the flounce neatly to the lining so it will fall over the outside, as in the picture.

A second flounce of lace several inches narrower is then sewed on top, and the basket is trimmed with bows of ribbon the shade of the canvas.

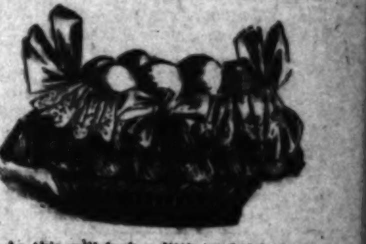
The ruffle can be omitted, but, perhaps you can find some lace in the lace box, and it certainly makes the basket much prettier. If the lace is soiled, you can clean it by washing carefully in tepid water and pure soap and wrapping it on a bottle to dry.

The bows can be knots of baby ribbon, if you prefer, instead of wide ribbon shown in the picture.

Another nice gift, and one much simpler and cheaper, is a catch-all made of a strawberry box. These are very pretty to stand on a table to hold odds and ends.

Take one of the quart boxes which can be found in every household, and line the bottom and sides with shirred crepe paper, gathering that for the sides about two inches from the top to make a frill. The outside is gilded or painted in white enamel paint, as you prefer. If you choose the crepe paper with bright flowered borders, it is particularly attractive.

Or you can cover your strawberry box inside and out with gay wall paper, cutting and pasting it carefully so it will be smooth and neat.



As this will look a little unfinished at the top, cut a piece of a different pattern three inches wide and a little longer than each side. Fold this lengthwise directly in the middle and paste over the edge, making a border 1½ inches deep on each side. Lap this neatly at the corners.

If the basket is covered in flowered paper the border should be of a plain contrasting shade, and vice-versa.

Alligators Are Hatched and Raised for Market

ONE might journey far without discovering an occupation as unique as that in which the talents of H. I. Campbell are employed near Hot Springs, Ark.

Engaged exclusively in raising alligators for market, Mr. Campbell has no known competitor. His "farm" is probably the oddest in the world.

From five hundred to seven hundred crawling, scaly creatures, of all sizes, are usually to be found upon the place. The proprietor employs up-to-date methods. He calls hypnotism to his aid in catching and handling old reptiles, and uses an incubator to hatch the young.

Ready sale is found for the product of the farm. Show people are always seeking additions to their menageries; patent medicine concerns and other business houses purchase the saurians for advertising purposes, and hundreds of the young are disposed of to visitors at the Hot Springs, who keep them for pets or ship them to friends.

ALLIGATORS are Campbell's hobby; their culture, his lifework; their traffic, his living. He probably has greater practical knowledge of their characteristics, habits and peculiarities than any other man in the world.

He knows the 'gators' favorite haunts, how best to lure them from their hiding places, how to trap them with least injury, how to hatch their eggs by the incubator method, and, best of all, how to make an alligator farm yield a large revenue.

This knowledge has been gained by years of patient observation and study, his experience with such reptiles having begun long ago during boyhood days on the Ganges river in India, where he was born.

Throughout all the country around the Hot Springs Campbell is scarcely ever referred to by his patronymic, but is known far and wide as "Alligator Joe."

A mountain stream, winding down into the valley, forms a chain of small lakes near the Arkansas resort. Two years ago Campbell, then a veteran alligator hunter of Florida and Louisiana, conceived the idea of inclosing these lakes and raising saurians for sale.

Since establishing his farm he has caught over fifty large alligators unaided on various hunting expeditions, and hundreds more caught by other hunters have been purchased for the place. Hundreds of eggs have been hatched in the incubator, and most of the young have survived.

Surprising even to the proprietor is the demand for alligators. They are shipped all over the country. Many are wanted for display in saloon windows.

Hundreds of young reptiles are sold to patrons of the nearby resort, who purchase the little creatures for souvenirs and to adopt as pets. Many visitors buy live alligators to send to friends at home for birthday, Christmas, graduation and wedding presents.

One Western proprietary company utilizes large numbers in advertising a certain kind of medicine. After indelibly stamping an advertisement on their backs, the little 'gators are sent to jobbers and druggists.

Managers of shows and circuses are the principal purchasers of the larger reptiles; while a profitable traffic in stuffed alligators, in hides and in leather souvenirs adds largely to the revenue of the industry.

Covering several acres, the lakes on the farm are divided into a number of compartments for the different sized alligators. This is to prevent the smaller ones from falling prey to the cannibalistic tendencies of the larger.

A high board fence surrounds the lakes. In the summer the alligators are permitted to enjoy themselves in the water or on shore at will.

Rarely does an alligator become tame. He lies for days sluggish and seemingly docile, but the sleepy eyes are ever on the alert to attack the keeper when his back is turned.

During the winter the reptiles hibernate. As soon as they become stiff with cold, they are placed in ventilated wooden boxes and packed away in the winter quarters, where they are stored like so much merchandise until spring awakens them.

In the alligator "factory" is seen one of the chief atractions of the farm—the incubator. Resembling an ordinary poultry incubator in appearance, but differing from it in certain technical details, it is said to be the only one of its kind in the world.

Here the eggs, which are capsule-shaped and almost two and one-half inches long, are placed in trays, forty-five eggs to the tray, and covered with straw, which must be moistened daily until the young alligators crawl from the shells. Other than this, the incubator requires little attention.

Released from the shells, the little 'gators, resembling lizards, are turned into an inclosure, practically to shift for themselves, although they are fed twice a day on scraps of beef.

No great expense is attached to the maintenance of the farm. The big alligators eat but once a week; and then a small dog or a piece of spoiled beef of equivalent size, obtained at a trifling cost, will satisfy them.

A 'gator can swallow a dog the size of the average fox terrier at one gulp, and be satisfied seven days. The smaller alligators eat more frequently, according to their size.

Even if an alligator goes without his meals for a month or two, he doesn't seem to miss them very badly. He can get along, if necessary, six months without food, and can endure a thirst protracted six weeks.

For Hot Springs the problem of disposing of the dog catcher's prey has been solved by Campbell's alligator farm.

Every Sunday morning, shortly after sunrise, the dog catcher's wagon may be seen backing up to the front gate. Several dozen yelping, snapping curs, sniffing the air suspiciously and tugging at their ropes, are unloaded and led into an inclosure where the saurians are confined.

It is said that the victims die painlessly. One swift sweep of the reptile's powerful tail, which could dash a skiff to pieces, and the dog is knocked lifeless into the water. The huge jaws close over the body, and the alligator sinks slowly to the bottom of the pool to enjoy a submarine canine feast.

This diet is supplemented by about five hundred pounds of beef or pork sent weekly from Kansas City packing houses.

Especial pride of the farm is "Big Joe," 14 feet long and weighing more than eight hundred pounds. He is kept in a pond to himself.

Campbell goes among the alligators fearlessly, although he always keeps his eyes open for a treacherous snap of powerful jaws. He says he controls the ugly reptiles by hypnotizing them.

Although in constant contact with alligators and making them his study, he has small affection for them individually.

"You can't trust 'em," he said recently. "They have absolutely no intelligence, but are creatures guided solely by instinct. They have no room for brains in that flat head of theirs. Their only mental machinery is simply an enlargement of the end of their spinal cord.

"You might pass near an apparently dormant alligator, without his noticing you, ninety-nine times, and the hundredth time he would, likely as not, snap at you.

"If he does, look out! When a 'gator takes hold of you he never lets go. The tenacity of a bulldog or a turtle is a joke compared with the way an alligator sticks.

"Especially dangerous is the female alligator in June, when she lays her eggs—from twenty to sixty.

"Although a mother alligator will fight fiercely for her unhatched young, after the shells are cracked she seems to feel that her duty is done, and the young 'gators are left to look out for themselves. A large percentage of them

AT THE THEATERS.

THE last of the series of managerial dissertations on the stock company is presented this week by John H. Blackwood, manager of the Belasco Theater, and ex-writer on Eastern newspapers.

Mr. Blackwood's first introduction to this town was at the head of various traveling companies. As a traveling manager he held the highest positions, and his achievements were such that Frederic Belasco obtained his services from David Belasco in New York, and gave him charge of the new theater here.

He has chosen as his title-piece, "The Theatrical Shop-keeper."

BY JOHN H. BLACKWOOD.

When Frederic Belasco suggested my coming to Los Angeles in the capacity of manager of his theater, he said:

"Now, you want to put away in camphor all your hifalutin ideas about the theatrical business. You're going to cease being a traveling manager, presenting the same play night after night for three years with never a change of bill, and getting prices ranging from 50 cents for a gallery seat to $2 for an orchestra chair; in other words, you're going to become a shop-keeper; only you're going to sell amusements, instead of clothing or jewelry or vegetables, like other shopmen."

You see, Belasco had been engaged in the stock company end of the theatrical business for almost ten years. He knew every phase of it; knew almost to a nicety just how to gauge the wants of his audiences, was able to judge how much comedy his patrons wanted to leaven the more serious plays. After having been a dramatic editor for four years, after having piked ahead of such well-known and withal capable players as Creston Clarke, Otis Skinner, Francis Wilson, Henrietta Crosman and Mrs. Leslie Carter, I naturally had firmly imbedded in my mind the idea that I knew at least something of the theatrical business.

MAUD EDNA HALL, ORPHEUM

Yet here was my new employer telling me virtually to forget everything I had learned about this profession, advising me I was to become a common shop-keeper, much the same as the man that advertises a marked down sale every time business gets a trifle slack. I didn't know whether I was expected to hustle around bright and early in the morning and see that the shutters were down and the janitors had performed their duties, or whether I was to keep the business hours of the average theatrical manager, noon to midnight—hours, by the way, that are amazingly attractive to so many young men who have a strong hankering to break into the theatrical business—the chief idea being that theater managers may lie abed later than the average mortal.

JOHN H. BLACKWOOD.

As Belasco waved his hand at me at the station in San Francisco, and yelled good bye and good luck, he added: "Remember you're to be a shop-keeper from now on."

The first week of the Belasco Theater brought a large lady to the box office. It was the last week in August, a year ago. The woman was of the sort that has more than the average supply of embonpoint. A child of some five or six years tugged at one hand. The other held a washed gold purse.

"Lemme see your diagram," she said, almost haughtily and quite majestically.

The polite treasurer of the Belasco mentioned the fact that, owing to the rush of work in getting the theater ready for the opening performance, someone had neglected to procure a diagram of the seating arrangement of the theater. However, he suggested that he might be able to assist her in selecting the seats she desired.

"Well, gimme eight 15 cent tickets; lessee, that'll be dollar an' twenty cents and I'll just have five cents left for car fare and the conductor wont charge a cent for' Emmerline, nobody'd take her for six; you wuddent wud you?"

"We have no 15 cent seats," explained Treasurer Clayton, "the cheapest we have are 25 cents each, but you'll find them very desirable."

"Oh, that's jes' too turrible, and I wanted to give a theater party to somma my frens. I thought the Belasco was a first-class theater."

"And then, when the ticket-dispenser agreed that he, too, had harbored the same opinion, but regretted that there were no seats as cheap as 15 cents, Mr. Belasco's declaration that I was to be a shop-keeper came back to me."

I was, for sure, a shop-keeper and the good woman had been on a bargain hunting expedition.

Its somewhat of a heart-breaking surprise to find that just as soon as you have made ready one play and it has scored a substantial and profitable success with your patrons that the next morning, when the newspapers have declared it to be quite the best thing you have done and the actors have been praised—I say, its hard for everyone concerned to have to lay it aside and take up a new play to give on the same stage a week later.

And, then, when this second piece does not meet with the same amount of critical and popular approval as its predecessor, everyone declares it is a shame that the successful play cannot be continued for another week.

It's identically the same as a city editor turning out a good paper Monday morning, an issue that fairly teems with interesting stories and perhaps contains some matter that has eluded the paper's contemporaries. The proprietor calls the self-satisfied city editor into the private office and remarks: "That's a pretty decent sort of a paper you had this morning, Mr. Jones. Keep it up." The next day's paper is not nearly so good as that bright Monday issue. The reporters are the same, the same alert city editor has been on duty, but somehow the news has not been flying the same as the day before.

The city editor gets no summons to meet the proprietor that morning, but no one wonders why.

It's just as difficult to present as large and as substantial a success at a stock theater every Monday night as it is for a city editor and his staff to turn out the same sort of a paper every day in the week.

And yet, when the bright young man from the paper is sent to criticise the work of the stock company players he never bears this in mind; he never realizes that his own work is of varying quality.

If he did, he wouldn't be a dramatic critic

There are exactly thirty-six situations possible to the man who writes plays. This number has never been increased and the chances are it never will be.

These thirty-six situations must be twisted, turned, changed from left to right and back again, altered much the same as mother used to have to alter father's worn clothes to make them fit little Jimmy, and yet neither the theater patrons or the theatrical writers take this into consideration. The manager of the stock company is blamed if he doesn't produce such a charming and fascinating play as "Old Heidelberg" every Monday night. The people who go to the theater to laugh insist that there must be plenty of farces just as good as "Charley's Aunt" or "Are You a Mason?" Unquestionably the playgoer may be right, but the managers have never yet been able to discover more than possibly three farces of "Charley's Aunt" merit.

But the manager is blamed, just the same, by the unthinking and untaught person who constitutes a decidedly major portion of the poliol.

A stock company generally gives a better production of a play than is usually seen when the piece is originally produced by a traveling company. The railroads will give the free use of only one car for scenery for every twenty-five fares. The average traveling dramatic company carries from twelve to eighteen people; rarely does the number exceed twenty-five and never more than fifty, which guarantees the free use of two cars for the transportation of baggage and scenery.

A weekly production at the Belasco Theater, for instance, taking into consideration the amount of furniture, costumes, theater trunks, scenery and electrical apparatus used, would more than fill two sixty-foot cars. Yet time after time the curtain is lifted on a really beautiful stage picture, one that, were it presented by a $2 company, would compel great applause, but the stock company never gets one lone hand of applause.

The stage carpenters are just as vitally interested in the reception of their part of the work as is the actor. The hard-working carpenter never gets his name in the criticisms of the play, although in many instances he richly deserves to. His is a task often requiring sleepless nights and tiring days to get ready for the Monday night performance.

We had one production at the Belasco Theater last winter upon which an uncommonly great amount of time and pains on the part of the stage carpenters was spent. They all agreed it was the best thing they had done in the line of scenery building. It was sure to be greeted with applause of the vociferous sort. As the curtains were parted on this particular act, the stage hands were standing in the entrance eager to catch the first round of applause that was to compensate them for their overtime.

But nary a bit of applause was heard.

Not even an usher banged his hands together. It was a silence as thick as a London fog.

"Oh, hell," screamed one of the deadly tired stage crew. He started on a run for the stage entrance and never showed up again for three days. Then I took him to a good priest and made him take the pledge, which, be it said to his credit, he has religiously kept.

From three to six weeks is the average time devoted to the rehearsals of a new play when it is made ready for presentation by a $2 company. David Belasco always gives his players six weeks' rehearsal; Ben Teal, who produced "Ben Hur" and many of the big musical comedies for Klaw and Erlanger, takes a full month; William Seymour declares he has to have six weeks, and generally he has the advantage of having seen the piece on a London stage before it is imported by Charles Frohman.

An actor in a traveling company would consider his manager a fit candidate for a dippy house if he were called upon to learn a part in a week. The actor would tell you he needs at least a fortnight to "get " in a part.

When the Belasco company played "Tennessee's Pardner," Joseph Galbraith was taken seriously ill at the Decoration Day matinée. His removal to a hospital was imperative. Had this happened to a high-priced traveling company, the chances are there would have been no performence for several nights, until someone could learn the part, unless, of course, the expedient of having an actor read the part with the manuscript in his hands was resorted to. Still when the leading man tells the leading lady that he loves her and has to turn over a page of printed matter to find out just how desperately the author has made him love her, it is not at all convincing to the audience.

When Mr. Galbraith's doctor announced that the hospital was where the Belasco leading man would have to spend the night of May 30, I told Mr. Warren, the stage manager, he would have to get up in the part and play it that night. He took the part at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The curtain was raised on "Tennessee's Pardner" that night as punctually as ever, and Mr. Warren spoke every line that Galbraith had uttered the preceding night, and no one in the audience would have been aware of Galbraith's absence from the cast if we had not made the announcement, as a matter of justice to Mr. Warren.

Mason Operahouse.

Tomorrow night at the Mason, Ethel Barrymore will open a brief engagement in her new play, "Sunday." Though never seen here, the piece had a long and successful run last year at the New York Hudson Theater. Its author is Thomas Raceward, an Englishman.

The author has placed his characters in the first and last acts in a western mining town, and in the intervening act at Brinthorpe Abbey, in England. Briefly outlined, the story tells of an Englishman seeking a western fortune, and, at his death, leaving his daughter, Sunday, to the care of his four mining partners. A pretty love story runs through the incidents that happen, a love-story reaching clear across the Atlantic and back again. A would-be seducer of Sunday is shot down, but in the end she marries happily. Bruce McCrea is still Miss Barrymore's leading man, and in her support are John Barrymore and others.

"Sunday" will be seen on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

On Thursday night "The Girl from Kay's" will be presented. It is a musical farce by Owen Hall and Ivan Caryll, and was a distinct hit when presented with a good cast in the East. Kay's is a millinery shop in the fashionable part of London, and the "Girl" is one of the young women employed in it. She is sent to deliver a bonnet to a bride about to start on her honeymoon, and meets the groom, whom she has known as a man-about-town. In congratulation of his marriage she throws her arms about his neck and kisses him—just as the bride enters the room.

Among the people who will present the piece is our old friend Bobby North, formerly of the Casino Theater during its early days.

"The Girl from Kay's" will be on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings.

Belasco.

Beginning tomorrow evening the Belasco theater stock company will return for a week to farce, presenting "A Fool and His Money." The play was first presented by Jameson Lee Finney, and afterwards in it Willie Collier attained his first great popularity.

Miss Virginia Brissac will make her début as ingénue tomorrow night.

Joseph Galbraith will have the most humorous part he has taken here, and the rest of the cast will include the entire Belasco company.

The story concerns a reckless youth whose family has cast him off without a shilling.

Burbank.

Charles P. Rice's comedy-drama, "The Forbidden Marriage," will be the offering of the Burbank stock company for the week beginning this afternoon.

The characters are all New Yorkers, and the story turns on a point of the New York statutes relating to the common-law marriage.

Unusual scenic effects are promised by the management. The first act is to show an elegant wedding reception, the second a gambling den, the third a picture of poverty and the last a home scene.

Orpheum.

Clay Clement's comedietta, "A Clever Awakening," will be presented at the Orpheum this week by Miss Maud Edna Hall and Charleton Macy.

Franz Ebert, the diminutive comedian recently with Anna Held, will be seen in Edmund's Day's latest sketch, "Dan Cupid." Dixon and Holmes, character vocalists, will display their talents at singing and acting. Hal Merritt, cartoonist, monologist, singer and whistler, will return. He was formerly seen at the Orpheum with his "Poster Girl" act.

The Spook Minstrels, Harry Corson Clarke in a new sketch, Genaro and Bailey in their sketch, and Prof. Allinei's trained baboon will complete the bill.

Grand Operahouse.

Charles A. Taylor's company will be seen again at the Grand Operahouse for a week commencing today. They will present a melodrama of the West in the early eighties, entitled "The Queen of the Highway." The central figure of this piece is Belle Diamond, a dashing outlaw woman of Arizona and New Mexico.

Fischer's.

"Helter-Skelter," a new Weber-Fieldian musical burlesque, will be presented by the Fischer stock company for the coming week.

The vaudeville bill includes Ed Crawford and Sadie Duff, comedy entertainers; the musical Fletchers, in a novelty act; Paddy Mahr, Irish comedian and parody singer, and new motion pictures.

"Pompeii" Continuance.

Pain's spectacle, "The Last Days of Pompeii," will be seen tonight, at Prager Park. Since the aggregation must leave on a night train, the performance will commence at 7:30 o'clock.

Unique.

The bill at the Unique the coming week will contain Bobby Dole and the Georges, in a new act; Stansfield, character impersonator and imitator; Katherine, contortionist; Adams brothers, dancers; Harcourt and Ward, in a new sketch; Hayes and Winchell, musicians, and motion pictures.

PROMPTINGS.

Virginia Harned will play "La Belle Marseillaise," a Parisian success.

"The Duke of Duluth" is to be entirely rewritten, and Nat Willis will continue as the star in a tramp character part.

Carrol Fleming is the author of the new play called "The Parson's Wife," in which Mabel McKinley has begun her starring tour.

Jean de Chauvenet, Pianist at Chiaffarelli Concert
Hugo Heermann, Violinist
Natorp Blumenfeld, Ellis Club Soloist
L.

Pauline Hall is to be sent out by Nelson Roberts and Frank Arnold in a revival of "Dorcas," in which she appeared some years ago.

Maude Lillian Berri, the California prima donna, is scoring a great success as Prince Rudolph in Claw & Erlanger's production, "Humpty Dumpty."

Marie Tempest is to appear in a new play by Alfred Sutro, author of "The Walls of Jericho." Sutro was an obscure London writer till he became famous as the author of this play. His second production however, met with failure.

The rather unexpected trip of Hall Caine to this country, at the request of his managers, is rather like sending for a trained nurse after the patient is dead, says the New York Sun. The fact that all classes of theater-goers who have seen it unite in declaring that the new Caine play, "The Prodigal Son," is a turgid, lumbering and tiresome melodrama is not likely to endear the American theater-going public to Mr. Caine, but it is true none the less. Speaking of Mr. Caine reminds one somehow or other of Miss Marie Corelli. Miss Corelli, according to the latest reports, is dramatizing another of her novels, and is herself to bring it to America for production. Miss Corelli's next novel is likely to be a somewhat nautical affair, for she has been cruising this summer on Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht, the Erin, and both she and the Irish cup chaser were on several occasions the guests of Wilson Marshall on board the Atlantic.

Every year a cruel joke is perpetrated at the Comedie Francaise, Paris. This theater, being State subventioned, is compelled by law to give auditions to those foolish enough to believe they have a chance of being engaged there. The house is empty; M. Claretie sits in one of the stalls, a few Societaires wander about in the semi-darkness. The candidate on the stage cannot help feeling oppressed by these lugubrious surroundings. If he speaks out loud he raises a kind of grotesque echo in the empty house; while if he drops his voice his words lose their effect. Everything is against him; and yet there are a few who still fondly believe they have a chance to join the house and present themselves at the annual competition. But the audition, or rather the farce, is finished. M. Claretie politely thanks the candidates and tells them they will hear from him in a week. Then they each receive a letter with the famous seal of the Comedie Francaise and the equally famous date of its foundation, 1680. The contents of the message never vary: "We are much obliged to you—but" and the candidates need not read the rest.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

ON Thursday evening Hugo Heerman and his son, Emil, will inaugurate the seventh season of the Philharmonic Course. The concert will be at Simpson Auditorium.

This man Heerman and his boy are violinists. They have never paraded themselves as virtuosi, and consequently, while it is said that the elder possesses talent of overwhelming mastery, they have never made the furore which other men have occasioned.

It is said that the art of Heerman differs materially from the artifices of some of the latter-day sensationalists of the violin. His technic is declared to be finished, his certainty in all mechanical difficulties most admirable, and whoever has heard his thirds, chromatic octave passages, double trill, arpeggios and legato work seems ready to testify to this.

It is further alleged that all his tones are absolutely pure, and that he plays with a most unusual depth of feeling.

Heerman, junior, was for many years a student of his father's work, and afterward went to Prague, where he continued his work under Sevick, the teacher of Kubelik, Kocian and Vecsy.

The Thursday evening programme will contain a Brahm's concerto, a Bach sonata, Schumann's "Garten Melodie" and "Am Springbrunnen," an Ernst nocturne and Sarasate's Spanish dance "Navarra," for two violins.

The Heermans will play again Saturday afternoon, giving Bach, Beethoven, Wilhelmj, Sophr and Paganini.

Ellis Club.

Tuesday evening the first concert of the Ellis Club's season will be given, at Simpson Auditorium.

As last year, this sterling body of men singers is under the baton of J. B. Poulin. One of the soloists of the evening will be Natorp Blumenfeld, violinist.

Sessions Concerts.

Commencing Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock Archibald Sessions will inaugurate a series of organ recitals at Christ Church.

The concerts will be brief, and a soloist will appear at each. The first soloist is to be John Douglas Walker, tenor. The second will be Natorp Blumenfeld, violinist.

Chutes Concerts.

For tonight's programme at Chutes Theater Manfredo Chiaffarelli will offer three unusual selections, in extensive transcriptions of Giordano's "Fedora" and "Andrea Charnier," and Wagner's "Walkurie."

The Giordano excerpts, Chiaffarelli claims, have never been heard in America, at least in such completion, nor in any manner from the instruments of a band of orchestrial form. Yet "Fedora" and "Andrea Charnier" are familiar grand operas in Europe, although they have never been heard to any extent either in concert or dramatic form on other than Italian stages.

The "Walkurie" excerpts are a new Chiaffarelli arrangement, including the ride of the Valkyrs and Brunhilde's battle-cry, which will be sounded by the brilliant trumpeter, Taddeo.

A harp solo will be given by Sig. de Bona, Miss Mae Reed will be the soprano soloist, and Jean de Chauvenet, French pianist, will play the Rive-King version of Liszt's second rhapsody.

Another programme will be given this afternoon.

New Violinist.

Among the incoming musicians is Natorp Blumenfeld, a well-known eastern violinist. Mr. Blumenfeld is a native of Hamburg, Germany, and studied with eminent instructors in his native city, and in Vienna and Paris.

He has just returned from an European trip, and intends to make Los Angeles his home. For some years he has been a well-known figure in the East, a frequent public performer, and a writer on musical subjects in the Musical Courier.

Mr. Blumenfeld will be first heard at the Ellis Club concert on Tuesday night and is also to be one of the soloists of the Symphony Orchestra season.

Arend's Band.

Compositions by members of Arend's Venice band will be featured during the coming week, among the pieces to be played being L. M. Horton's "Thoughts," which has made a considerable hit in the seaside town, Mr. Stoudenmeyer's "Belle of Venice March," E. C. Kammarmeyer's "Pollywogs," several of Robert Messinger's arrangements, and "The Lady Alice Gallop," composed by Charles Hubbard in compliment to Mrs. Alice Andrews of San Francisco, who is a sister of Mrs. John Singleton of Singleton Court. The last will be played Tuesday evening. Arend will close his season at Venice October 28.

Music Study Club.

"The Students' Music Study Club" has just been organized among the students of the Conservatory-Los Angeles School. The club is under the supervision and direction of F. A. Mills, and the subjects to be pursued will be musical history and form. Outsiders who wish to join will be welcomed.

Chiaffarelli Praise.

Mrs. Mary A. Bartow has sent this communication to The Times musical department concerning Chiaffarelli and his band.

"Manfredo Chiaffarelli and his fifty musicians seem to have taken musical public by storm. We all know Chiaffarelli would never come to Los Angeles with a poor band, but we hardly expected so much in the way of superb solo work. In fact, his new band is a musical revelation.

"Who in Los Angeles has ever played the trombone as this young artist Croce? Such tone, smoothness and ease of execution are always the mark of the master technician. Besides, there is an artistic oboe soloist, Taddeo, the silver-voiced trumpeter, who is probably equaled by few in the world, the boy tympani-player, who was given a medal by Milwaukee musicians upon his departure from that city, Cannelli, the brilliant clarionet soloist, and little Giulli, the master of the flute.

"Here in our California these fiery sons of Italy may color their music with all the mystical significance of their own birthland, for they know how to play direct to the human heart.

"As someone has said, 'It looks a little matter to strike the chords of laughter and of sorrow, to arouse a melody which shall leave all who hear the better and the braver for the hearing. This may well take a man's lifetime, and, perhaps, may well repay it.'"

Eames Seat Sale.

Single tickets for the concert of Emma Eames will be on sale tomorrow morning at Birkel's music store.

Unique Lawsuit.

Paris is the scene of a lawsuit of interest to musicians, says the Paris correspondent of the Musical Courier. The case is that of André Maurel and Mme. Raimund against the widow of Johann Strauss, and the damages claimed by the complainants are a half-share in the net profits of the performance of "Die Fiedermaus" in France, and 30,000 francs indemnity. Maurel and Mme. Raimund are the heirs of a man named Wilder, who, in 1875, on commission from Johann Strauss, translated the text of the "Fledermaus," preparatory to its performance in France. Owing to the protest of Meilhac & Halévy, the firm which had loaned the liberetto, the performance of the opera in its original state could not then take place in Paris. Wilder, therefore, wrote a new libretto adaptable to the music of the "Fiedermaus," and under the title of "Die Zigeunerin" this new opera was produced at the Renaissance Theater. After the widow of Strauss had made arrangements with Halévy by which the original work could be performed, but in a different translation, made by Paul Ferrier, "Die Zigeunerin" was pushed aside for the new adaptation. The heirs of Wilder, therefore, are questioning the legality of this proceeding, and are suing Mme. Strauss for half of the total profits of the work's production in France, and 30,000 francs indemnity besides, on the ground that the introduction of the "Fiedermaus" rendered impossible the continued presentation of "Die Zigeunerin" and cut off the revenue that would have accrued from such performance.

These somewhat obscure claims, briefly stated, rest upon the principle that the author and the composer of an opera, or, for that matter, any combination of words and music, are joint owners of the work on which they collaborate, and that neither author nor composer can apply his own share of the opera, songs or song in question, without full permission of the other joint owner.

Moore's Fidelia Band.

Eastlake Park this afternoon: March, "Call of the Wild" (Losey;) waltz, "Dorothy Vernon" (Fox;) "The Crickets' Serenade" (Bendix;) "Cupid's Garden" (Eugene;) "American Patrol" (Meecham;) overture, "La Pouppe de Nuremberg" (Adams;) march, "Fantastique" (Fucit;) selection, "Samson and Delilah" (Saint Saens;) "Medley Popular Airs" (Chattaway;) finale, selected.

Art and Artists.

A Portrait by Burne-Jones.

The shadows fold her 'round
And sink profound
Into intense blackness of background,
Against which, lily white,
Pure as a sun's ray, she springs to light.
And she sits there, still, so still
That I can hear the far-off call of thrushes
On summer mornings from the hawthorn bushes
Or orchards full of mellow sound.
Thus I fill
Another canvas with tall trees abloom,
And the chaste blue of English skies
Over an English home.
As clear as streams,
Untroubled to their sweet depths, are her eyes.
What warm surprise
Will make her red who pale
Now reads life to a limit and there stops?
One shall part the veil;
And open vistas of fair years to be,
And little forms that cling about the knee
Shall steal, dear guests, unlooked for, silently
Into the virgin spirit of her dreams.

The Works of Besnard.

The exhibition of works by the painter Besnard, which has taken place at the Galeries Georges Petit during the months of June and July of the present year, is a marked event not only in the history of contemporary art but in that of French painting as a whole. For in thus setting before our eyes the assiduous labor of thirty years, the great painter confirms us in the definite conviction, based upon previous study of his works when shown separately, that he is the greatest force in French painting of the day; in short, he now compels the public—always slow of comprehension—to recognize the immensity of his talent. Something of the same kind happened in the case of Delacroix; as long as his works were seen isolated he had his detractors, but on the day when his output was collected in its entirety, all the stupid criticisms formulated against him were stifled for ever. Delacroix, unfortunately, did not see that day; fate accorded him but a posthumous triumph. It has not been so with Besnard, who, in the full maturity of his age and strength, witnesses the great success of his work—a success which cannot fail to awaken a responsive echo among readers of this review, and among Besnard's many English and American friends.

Face to face with these four hundred specimens of Besnard's work here collected, we are enabled to understand far better the essential characteristic of the artist's genius, and to grasp the entire unity of this virile talent mid the extensive variety of his methods. What is this painter, whom many have chosen to consider as an independent, an innovator, a revolutionary, but the direct descendant of those eighteenth-century painters of fetes-galantes, of those lovers of joy, light and life whom men call Watteau or Fragonard. Though in a modified setting, with different accessories and with a more refined, more diversified, temperament, Besnard appears to us a very perfect reincarnation of the French genius, passionately imbued with elegance, gracey, nervous sensibility, and harmony.

What makes the art of this master so complete is precisely this: that with him perfection of drawing yields in no way to the craftsmanship of the colorist.

For many people Besnard is a colorist simply; and he is, in fact, an admirable composer of symphonies. No one since Turner has conjured with light so divinely. But those who are willing to examine his work more closely will soon discover that hand in hand with the ardent colorist is the steady and faultless draughtsman; this son of Rubens is also a rival of Ingres, and beneath his most dazzling fantasies of color lies an extremely solid skeletal structure. . . .

This splendid exhibition leaves Besnard, if possible, greater than ever; the character of his work and its powerful originality are here definitively asserted. In other artistic feasts of the same kind—in the Manet, the Puvis, the Whistler exhibitions—the pleasure experienced was tinged with a certain bitterness by the thought that those men of genius were no longer with us. There is nothing here to spoil the gratification of our eyes and minds, which is only increased by the certain hope of other masterpieces to come. I was touched with a feeling of profound and grateful emotion on beholding this great artist, still in full vigor and surrounded by his friends, present in person at this feast of labor and of beauty; and I reflected that it is given to few men to enjoy such an experience.—[Henri Frantz, in International Studio.

The Great Regret.

Have you ever really thought upon the beauty of this world which is passing away before your eyes? You have read the words, "The eye is not satisfied with seeing nor the ear with hearing," but have you ever thought that they might bear another sense than the person gives them?

For my part, when I come to die I know what my chief regret will be. Not for my poor human sins, which have really hurt nobody save myself and most of which I will have forgotten. Not because I have missed the laurel which was the darling dream of my youth. Not because I have always fallen short of my ideal and, still worse, betrayed my own dearest hopes. Not for the selfish reason that I have never been able to gain that position of independence and security which would enable me to work with a free mind. Not for having failed to score in any one particular what the world calls a success. Not for these nor any other of the vain desires that mock the human heart in its last agony.

No; I shall simply be sorry that I failed to enjoy so much of the beauty of this dear earth and sky, or even to mark it in my hurry through the days, my reckless pleasures, my stupid tasks that yielded me nothing. I shall think with utter bitterness of the time out of all the time given me I might have passed in profitably looking at the moon. Or in marking with an eye faithful to every sign, the advance of the bannered host of summer unto the scattered and whistling disarray of autumn. How many of those wonderful campaigns have I really seen? —alas! I know too well how many I have numbered.

There was a rapture of flowing water that always I was promising myself I should one day explore to the full, and now I am to die without knowing it.

There were days and weeks and months of the universe in all its glory bidding for my admiration, yet I saw nothing of it all. My baser senses solicited me beyond the cosmic marvels. I lost in hours of sleep, or foolish pleasures, or useless labor, spectacles of beauty which the world had been storing up for millions of ages—perhaps had not been able to produce before my brief day.

I regret even the first years of life when the universe seemed only a pleasant garden to play in and the firmament a second roof for my father's house. For Miss Martin.

Miss E. Augusta Lamb of No. 1329 Ocean View avenue was hostess on Thursday afternoon at a delightful little tea given in compliment to Miss Belle Martin, the talented young vocalist, who is soon to wed Charles Lamb, a cousin of Miss Lamb.

The entire home was made bright with gay flowers and greenery and music was enjoyed through the afternoon. In the reception room great bunches of pampas grass gave a bride-like effect and smilax formed a canopy over both this room and the hall, which was trimmed with white flowers and ferns. In the dining-room, where tea was served, a particularly pretty arrangement was carried out. In the center of the highly-polished table a great cake of ice was placed and from its hollow center bloomed pink flowers and delicate ferns, and pink satin bows were effective. A feature, causing much merriment, was the adornment of the table with a tiny lamb, while from the chandelier swung a snowy bird (a martin) and joining these two were loops of pink satin lover's knots. About twenty-five guests were entertained and the afternoon was most enjoyable.

Brilliant Reception.

Miss Virginia Miller, the national secretary-general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was the honored guest on Friday afternoon at a smart reception and tea given at the Woman's Club House by the members of Eschscholtzia Chapter D.A.R.

Mrs. Harriet S. Wright, the regent, was assisted in receiving by the guest of honor and officers of the chapter who included: Mrs. William Wallace McLeod, Mrs. John C. McCoy, Mrs. J. H. Johnson, Mrs. Nathan Cole, Mrs. H. L. Cutter, Mrs. Mary Banning, Mrs. E. E. Reed and Mrs. Roscoe B. Ashley. Dinubila's orchestra discoursed music through the afternoon and a large company of local and visiting D.A.R.'s enjoyed greeting the charming visitor, who is the first national officer to visit the coast.

Mrs. J. C. McCoy had superintended the decorations, which were extremely beautiful, being in browns and reds and greens, contrasting well with the dark tones of the walls and furnishings. Tall deep red cannas, umbrella plants were effectively utilized and red geraniums and dahlias with sword ferns and cactus made a brilliant array in the different rooms, while in the hall a huge Indian basket filled with yellow chrysanthemums was most attractive. A particularly pretty feature of the afternoon was the presentation to Miss Miller of a bunch of huge white chrysanthemums, tied with great fluffy bow of pale blue maline, representing the D.A.R colors. The little speech accompanyin the gift was made by Mrs. Harriet Wright, and Miss Miller responded in kind with quite as much tact and grace. Representatives were present from Riverside, Santa Paula, Santa Monica and other neighboring cities, and other visitors included: Mrs. J. A. Parker, Mrs. A. Jones, Mrs. R. A. Springs of New York City, and Mrs. Clara Kyle Crank, a visiting daughter from the U.D.C., which convened last week in San Francisco.

Miss Miller is a thoroughly charming and cultivated woman, and all those who had the pleasure of meeting her will treasure the memory of her graciousness.

Luncheon and Box Party.

Mrs. Milo M. Potter entertained with a cosy luncheon on Tuesday, followed by a box party at the Oberle benefit. Guests included Mrs. Randolph Miner, Mrs. John G. Mossin, Mrs. Walter Jarvis Barlow, Mrs. Michael J. Connell, Mrs. Henry Carlton Lee and Miss Nina Jones.

Leave for Omaha.

Mr. and Mrs. Milo M. Potter and their daughter, Miss Nina Jones, left on Wednesday for a trip through the East, expecting to be gone about six weeks.

From Adirondacks.

Mrs. Charles Monroe of West Twenty-eighth street, who has been summering in the Adirondacks, has arrived home again.

Lovely Lunch at Club.

Miss Lelia Simonds was hostess yesterday at a charming luncheon given at the California Club in compliment to Mrs. Boyd Woodhead and Mrs. Louis Garrabrant, two charming women from Nashville, Tenn., who are the guests of their sister, Mrs. Will Innes of No. 1440 West Twenty-ninth street.

The table was decorated with a fetching arrangement of pink flowers in fancy baskets, while places were marked with cards adorned with pretty Gainsborough girls' heads. After the luncheon the party was entertained with a box party at the Belasco, and besides the hostess and guests of honor those entertained were: Mrs. Will A. Innes, Mrs. Chester Montgomery, Mrs. Will Dorn, Mrs. Albert Llewellyn Cheney, Mrs. Harry Robinson, Mrs. Will Bayley and Misses Adele Brodtbeck, Bird Chanslor and Pearl Seeley.

Miss Simonds and Warren Carhart, who are to be married next month, have decided on November 15 as the date of their wedding, which is to be a very quiet one, taking place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Simonds of No. 2800 South Flower street, with only members of the family as guests. Miss Simonds's many friends are planning to entertain much for her in the near future as she is one of the most popular of brides-elect. Mrs. Will Bayley will give an affair and Mrs. Chester Montgomery is planning one, the dates of which will be announced later.

Jolly Surprise.

Relatives and friends of Mrs. R. J. Anderson gave a jolly surprise in her honor on Thursday evening, the occasion being her birthday anniversary. The party was given at her home, No. 1226 St. Andrew's Place. Songs and violin solos were given during the evening and later a dainty supper was served and the guests departed wishing the honor many happy returns of the day. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Will Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. De Forrest Smith, Mrs. L. M. Dorland, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Anderson and the Misses Hazel and Marguerite Anderson, Eunice B. Dorland, Alice Starr and Ethel Reed, and Messrs. Philip C. Dorland, Frank and Paul Anderson and Smith.

For Miss Newell.

Miss Maude Newell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. A SHOE THAT WON'T "RUN OVER"

Good many people don't appreciate the rema "stand-up" quality of the Regal Shoe till they've been wearing their first pair a few months and notice how they hold their shape.

It isn't a happen-so circumstance in just that one pair. It's no accident. It costs money to make a pair of shoes hold shape—careful lasting, good old-fashioned hand workmanship, and honest materials in the hidden parts.

It's a quality you can't see when you buy the shoes. But when you've worn them a while you find them treading flat and square across the ball; not sagging under the arch, but snugging up without a wrinkle; the toe preserving its original smooth shape; the back part above the heel curving around firmly with no sign of a bulge.

And then you are pretty sure to buy Regals next time.

And next time.

So it pays.

[AUTHORIZED ANNOUNCEMENT.]

A GLIMPSE OF PARIS.

During the three days of the fall opening exhibit of beautiful imported gowns and ladies' furnishings, held at Terrill's, 328-340 South Hill street, the ladies of this city and environs who responded to the invitation to the opening, met with a bewildering array of what was conceded to be the richest gathering of material and styles ever seen in Los Angeles.

The charming reception rooms were tastefully decorated for the occasion, and as one strolled from one lovely creation of the dressmakers' art to another, cries of astonishment and exclamations of praise were heard each moment.

Models of gowns which received some of the highest encomiums were from such well-known establishments as Paquin, Templier, Dracoll, Callot and Mamby, artists with world-wide reputations.

So much elegance was displayed it would be impossible to go into detail. Handsome embroideries, silver cloth gowns, elegant laces and jets vied for supremacy, while the nobby hats came in for quite a share of attention. Of course all the gowns were duly admired, and a crepe de chene coat, some stunning French waists and an elaborate lace coat were much admired.

All these materials with the French underwear, corsets, gloves, etc., were personally selected in Paris by the Misses Terrill, who visit that city every year to purchase the very latest models of gowns, costumes and furnishings, consequently their patrons are as elegantly dressed as the bon ton of le Champs Elysee.

The Home Circle.

The home can be furnished with excellent entertainment by one of the large PEERLESS TALKING MACHINES. THE ROUND TABLE—Where the Editorial Staff Gathers on Sunday Mornin

AMONG THE BUSY WOMEN.

"We have 105 active and twenty associate members of our Young Women's League in Pasadena," said Mrs. Ellen B. Farr, "nearly every one of them business women. We organized last March and we now maintain a suite of seven rest rooms near the center of town. In the dining-room we serve a light lunch at noon at a nominal charge, which just covers the expense of its provision and preparation. We have one room fitted up to entertain the stranger within our gates who wishes to have a temporary lodging place. Pasadena needs a clearing-house for business women, and we intend our league to be entirely self-supporting. We hold two public meetings each month, one a business meeting and the other social."

"It's rather odd," said Mrs. Bartlett, vice-president of the Woman's Friday Afternoon Club at Ontario, "but it happens that the names of our three executive officers all begin with B, hence we are known as the "three B's." We were hostesses at our opening club gathering last week, Mrs. Brackenridge, our president, Mrs. Benink, our secretary-treasurer, and myself. Our programmes for the year embrace a variety of topics. We are to have two sessions devoted to California—its products, natural wonders, pioneer days, its plants, birds and flowers. Two sessions will deal with Russia. Then we shall take up, from time to time, the current events of the day, the American Indian, the cathedrals of the Old World, character sketches of prominent authors, the Panama Canal, child labor, forestry, and recent inventions. We have eighteen active members."

"Our club is called the San Diego Club," remarked its president, Mrs. Ida F. Johnston. "We do not add the prefix 'woman's.' Why should we? You never hear of such a thing as the 'California Men's Club,' and why should we specify the sex? Of course our club is made up exclusively of women, though. We have 125 members and we discuss current topics, travel and literature, besides the social problems of the day. This year our travel section will take us through Holland."

"It's the simplest thing in the world to belong to our club, the Needlework Guild," said Mrs. S. S. Salisbury. "There are no dues or fines. In fact there are ever so many ladies who belong to the guild and don't know it. To be eligible for active membership one has only to give to the needy two absolutely new garments each year—that's just all there is to it. It is not a sewing society either, as so many who do not understand believe. Many members buy these garments ready made. Last year our branch of the guild gave 3306 garments to the various organized charities of the city to be distributed where they would do the most good. We never attempt to place our gifts miscellaneously. We turn them all over to the associations whose business it is to look after the worthy poor. The Los Angeles Guild is divided into nineteen sections, each with officers, and each section responsible for 110 garments. There are branches in Pasadena and San Diego, and we are all allied to the National Needlework Guild of America, established over twenty years ago. On the first Tuesday in November we shall have our annual ingathering. The only requirement for membership is the gift of two absolutely new garments during each year."

"We have 100 members of the Audubon Society," said Rev. Eliza Tupper Wilkes, "fifty adults and the rest children. The primary object of the organization is to educate women out of the savage instinct of wearing dead birds and their scalps on their headgear." "Yes," added a sympathetic listener, "if women could but realize that every soft breast or shining wing worn on a hat means that some mother or father heart, a tiny heart but capable of loving and toiling for its brood, has been pierced through just to set the decoration there. We protest against the cruelty of vivisection in the interest of science and yet we permit this murder to be committed in order that we may adorn our bonnets in the name of fashion.

'Caught mid some mother-work,
Torn by a hunted Turk,
Just for your hat.
Plenty of mother-heart yet in the world:
All the more wings to tear, carefully twirled.
Women want that?'"

"Woman—the enigma of the nineteenth century. We can't guess her, but we'll never give her up," murmured a man as he quietly and unobtrusively slid into a rear seat under the gallery of the auditorium in the First Congregational Church during a morning session of the Woman's Parliament. He was the Only Man there, but he sat in an inconspicuous place. The Man minister who had been invited to make the opening invocation had performed that duty and gone, but this Lone Man stayed on. Gradually, as he became interested in the proceedings, he crept from seat to seat toward the front till finally, all unconsciously, he landed right in the front row of the center aisle seats. There he was discovered by a Times reporter, who mercilessly tracked him to his lair and asked sympathetically, "Are you really here because you are interested in the proceedings, or is it because your wife is a delegate?" Confronted by the open question, the Only Man frankly owned up. "You see," he whispered confidentially, "my wife is the president of our woman's club in San Diego and I came along, too. I notice that these women handle this convention with better parliamentary skill than men do. They don't waste so much time and they haven't such an absorbing desire to hear themselves talk." There, now!

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, reëlected president of the American Civic Association at the annual convention held in Cleveland. About delegates were present.

arles W. Russell, who has just been made Assistant Attorney General, has been in the Department of Justice a good many years, having risen by sheer merit from a clerkship to his present place.

Among the most interesting candidates for aldermen in New York is Max Kelman, 22 years old, the newsboy financier of the Bronx, who is conducting an interesting campaign in the Thirty-fourth district. Seven years ago he began as a news dealer, made wise investments in stocks and is now worth $50,000, besides some valuable real estate.

The first telegraph office in the world was fitted up by Henry M. Dellinger, a native of Washington County, Md. He is 84 years old, but his memory is very keen, particularly of events surrounding the sending of the first telegrams. The office installed by Mr. Dellinger was in a couple of rooms in an old government building in Washington, the general postoffice now standing on the site.

Colonel Leroy Templeton and James C. Totten of Indianapolis are large landowners in Newton county, Indiana. They are also friends of many years' standing. Some time ago they got into a dispute regarding their adjoining property and Templeton sued for $100,000 damages. The case was fought through several terms and the old friends had become enemies. One day last week they met by accident in Kentland. Acting on a sudden impulse, Totten extended his hand and said: "We're a couple of fools." Templeton grasped the proffered hand, cordially agreed with the observation made and in half an hour the two were dining together, having reached an agreement.

Mrs. Grace Shaw Kennedy stands at the head of the Chicago women of wealth. According to the tax assessors she is the owner of more Chicago bank stock than any other woman in that city. She pays taxes on $552,000 worth of these securities, and in addition is put down for $1,000,000 worth of other personal property. Mrs. Kennedy possesses more diamonds than any Chicago woman except Mrs. Potter Palmer. Her horses and carriages and costly paintings, vases, tapestry, china, furniture, gowns and jewelry which the assessor discovered at her home dazzled him, and he declared on his return to the office of the assessing board that $1,000,000 was a low estimate for the value of this magnificence.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

Arthur S. Twogood, owner of the townsite of Oleander, in Fresno county, has left for a visit to the home of his parents in Wanganui, New Zealand.

Millionaire C. A. Baldwin is planning to build a palatial home at Broadmoor, near Colorado Springs, to cost a quarter of a million dollars. It will be the finest home in Colorado.

Frederick B. Pratt, son of the late Charles Pratt, and one of the wealthiest capitalists of New York, is registered at the Potter Hotel in Santa Barbara. He is accompanied by Mrs. Pratt. Their son is attending the Thacher School in Ojai Valley.

Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco recently had a social evening. He appeared at two masquerade balls, opened a pattern makers' high jinks and started the terpsichorean ball rolling for the bartenders, besides attending a few minor functions. It was claw-hammer night for the Mayor.

The home of Mrs. Eleanor Martin in San Francisco was filled with southern delegates and guests to meet them last Sunday afternoon, the handsome halls and rooms made a-bloom in honor of the visitors. The day was most happy in its atmosphere of congeniality and greeting, many old friends meeting, while the pleasures of California sightseeing were the general theme of discussion.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

Australia's New Capital.

Dalgety is the name of the new capital of the Commonwealth of Australia, decided at last after five years of keen local controversy. By the constitution of the Commonwealth, proclaimed on January 1, 1901, bringing the six separate states or self-governing colonies of Australia into one federation, the capital of the politically-united island-continent was alloted to New South Wales, the oldest settlement of the group. But owing to the jealousy subsisting between Sydney and Melbourne, the capitals respectively of New South Wales and Victoria, nearly equal in population (about half a million apiece,) and each claiming commercial superiority over the other, Sydney was expressly barred as the seat of government.

After this battle of the two large cities, came even more biter battles of rival country places in New South Wales, conveniently near to the Victorian border, and therefore approximately at the population center of gravity. Meanwhile Melbourne had been made the provisional capital, its State Parliamentary buildings being the best adapted for the purpose and being willingly loaned, and during the five years of bickering the Victorian politicians have been deliberately accused of prolonging the controversy so as to keep the Federal government in their own territory as long as possible. However, at last all differences have been adjusted and the site of Australia's "Washington, D. C.," is definitely determined.

An Admirable Location.

Dalgety, approximately enough, preserves the name of one of the pioneers of Australia's greatest industry and main source of wealth, the growing of wool. It was a man of that name who founded the firm of Dalgety & Co., now one of the principal corporations engaged in the Australian wool trade, with branches throughout the whole country, central offices in London, and a world-wide reputation among those interested in the wool business. At present, the place is only a small village, in and near which live some two hundred people. So none of our maps in America show its name.

However, let those interested take their atlas, and look to the southeast corner of the island-continent. There they will find the Snowy River duly marked. It is on this stream, one of the prettiest in Australia, that the new capital is situated. The views from the proposed site are extensive and picturesque. Dalgety itself is 2650 feet above sea level, and in full sight, forty miles to the west, is Mount Kosciusko, in the Snowy Range, 7328 feet high, the loftiest peak in Australia. It is within easy access of the sea, yet far enough inland to be safe from naval attack. The nearest port is Eden, sixty-five miles away, and this harbor is a good one, where fairly large ships can already berth and improvements can readily be made.

The capital is to be the center of a Federal district, like our own District of Columbia, and for this purpose it is proposed to resume from private proprietorship an area of some 900 square miles. The total cost of land purchase, water supply, public buildings, and railway works is estimated at about $27,000,000.

Representation Will be Affected.

Even after the Federal Parliament House is built, it is likely that for a good few years to come Dalgety will remain a "bush" capital—in Australia the word "bush" is used as the word "brush" in America, meaning unreclaimed land. A few members of Parliament having business interests in Sydney and Melbourne may find themselves able to legislate four days in the week, and return to their home cities for the other three. But at the best this will be laborious, and as regards the other States—Queensland, Tasmania, South Australia, and Western Australia—any such division of duties will be impossible. So the change to the new capital is quite likely to knock out the very best element in Australia's present pariamentary representation, that is to say, the substantial business men, who can do public duty and attend to private interests simultaneously in such a metropolis as Melbourne, but would be hopelessly handicapped in the 'way-out-of-the-world capital of Dalgety.

Walking Delegates in Parliament.

The worst feature in Australian politics is the professional politician who chases a seat in the Senate or House of Representatives solely because of the salary attached to it. A labor member with a fixed salary of $2000 a year has a fine snap. At present merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, etc., share in the representation, but, with the Federal capital removed to the back-blocks, this will be more difficult in the future. Therefore, halcyon days seem to be looming up for the walking delegates in Australia, who have long since seen that politics is their best game, and have abandoned the Trades Hall for the Parliament House. Even now, they hold, roughly, one-third of the political power, and any tendency that will increase this proportion must prove a serious menace to a country from which capital is already being steadily withdrawn because of the distrust engendered. So even the Australians themselves are contemplating the parliamentary exodus into the wilderness with somewhat grave misgivings.

Cecil Rhodes's Railway.

Rapid progress is being made in the construction of the Cape to Cairo railway, now well north of the Zambezi River. Three hundred whites and six thousand natives are employed on the construction work, and the line is being pushed forward at the rate of a mile per day. All the materials for the bridges as well as the steel rails are being imported from England. Great attention is being paid to sanitation, and the health of the big camps is reported to be excellent.

Student Code of Honor.

A good number of students in American coleges are enabled to complete their courses of study by entering into obligations to pay for their tuition after entering active life, and it is a well-known fact that almost invariably such debts—true debts of honor—are discharged promptly and in full. The Quartier Latin of Paris, however, where the student class congregates, appears to have a different ethical code. Some years ago there was established in connection with the Sorbonne, or University of Paris, a special committee empowered to expend certain sums at the annual examinations so as to enable poor students to pay fees and dues without borrowing at interest. The money is advanced on the strict understanding that it is a loan to be returned as soon as circumstances permit. Altogether some $3500 has been paid out, but less than $100 has been refunded. Either the French graduate who receives such benifits fails to prosper on leaving the University, or he regards the bond more lightly than his similarly circumstanced brother on this side of the Atlantic.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Ostrich Farming.

To a small extent the United States has a stake in the growing and marketing of ostrich feathers. But, of course, the home of the industry is in Cape Colony, South Africa, where the big bird is indigenous and used to roam wild. Prior to 1867 the supply of feathers was obtained solely by hunting; the ostriches were run down and killed. But now the birds are all domesticated—otherwise, they would have been exterminated long ago—and the amount of wild feathers put upon the market is quite insignificant. Last year the colony produced 470,381 pounds, with a declared export value of $11 per pound. Therefore, the total export value exceeded $5,000,000, and on the actual markets this valuation was, of course, greatly enhanced. Although the production has been steadily advancing during recent years, the price has remained much the same, showing that the world's increasing wealth can take care of the increasing supplies.

But now it appears that the limits of production are about reached so far as Cape Colony is concerned. According to one of the addresses delivered before the British Association, the best of the country for ostrich farming, that is, where the rainfall is not over twenty inches, with a rich soil, sheltered from high winds, and with no extremes of temperature, is now fairly fully stocked, and further increase must come from districts not so well adapted for the industry, or from more land being put under irrigation and alfalfa, a costly matter because of the physical difficulties of the region. Therefore, it would seem that South Africa will soon be unable to meet the requirements of the trade, or else there must be a steady advance in the price of ostrich feathers. Australia has adopted the industry on a considerable scale, there being a single farm at Port Augusta, South Australia, with over a thousand birds. We have one or two small farms in the Far West, but these can hardly be counted as much more than experimental. However, with the feather market advancing, greater attention may now be paid here to the commercial possibilities of the enterprise.

Mammoth Engineering Works.

An engineering establishment that employs 25,000 workmen and has a weekly wage bill of $200,000, certainly ranks as among the biggest undertakings in the world. The description applies to the famous Armstrong works at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. The departments that have gradually grown around this colossal institution, which started as a gun-making venture, are shipbuilding, steel-making, engine building of every kind, machine-tool factory, shell and fuse factory, armor-plate factory, and electrical equipment.

The founder of the works was Sir William Armstrong, and his story is one of the romances of industry. Up to the age of 37 he was a lawyer. Then he abandoned this profession, and almost at once became widely known as a hydraulic engineer. Soon he invented the famous Armstrong gun, an immense advance in the artillery of the time, surviving from the days of Waterloo. Gradually there were amalgamations with other establishments specializing along certain lines, until the undertaking, after sixty years, has reached its present vast dimensions.

At Elswick, as the place is named, some of the most famous warships of the world have been built. Many of Japan's biggest battleships and cruisers that did service in the recent war came from the Armstrong works, the guns as well as the hulls. The United States Navy has two Elswick-built cruisers, the New Orleans and the Albany, launched, respectively, in 1896 and 1899, high-speed vessels of 3770 tons. Other navies that have patronized the Armstrong works are Russia, Norway, Portugal, Brazil, Argentina, and Chile. Specialties in shipbuilding construction are frequently ordered from Elswick—for example, the famous Russian ice-breakers were constructed there, also the boats that carry the trains across Lake Baikal on the Siberian route to Vladivostok. The firm has a large branch establishment on the Bay of Naples, mainly devoted to building ships and providing armaments for the Italian government.

The Supremacy of Niagara.

The full report of Prof. Ayrton's address on "The Distribution of Power," delivered at Johannesburg, South Africa, during the recent meetings of the British Association, and dealing incidentally with the Niagara Falls and the Zambezi Falls as rival energy-producers, has now come to hand. The following passage puts the question in a nutshell: "Probably like myself, you have heard vague comparisons made between the power of the Victoria and the Niagara Falls. Now, what is the true comparison? The flow at Niagara varies at different times of the year from about 62,000,000 to 104,000,000 gallons per minute. At the Victoria Falls the flow can be one-twelfth of the smaller number—for it is so now; and some authorities, well acquainted with the spot, say that at the end of another three months the flow will only be half of that. The mean available drop at Niagara is about 160 feet; at the Victoria falls about 380 feet. Hence, while the minimum Niagara flow represents about 3,000,000 horse power, the present Victoria flow represents about 580,000 horse power, or only about one-fifth of the preceding. Further, if those who predict the flow of the Zambesi sinking to something like two and a half million gallons per minute in November are true prophets, the Victoria Falls will then only give out about 300,000 horse power."

Our Booming Manufactures.

The latest returns as to imports and exports strongly reflect the prosperous condition of trade and industry. During the month of August this year, as compared with the same month last year, there has been an all-round increase of 25 per cent. Moreover, analysis of the figures shows the gains to be in the very best possible directions. Thus, on the import side, crude materials for use in manufacturing advanced no less than $50,000,000, while on the export side manufactures show a gain of $53,000,000. Up to the year 1897 the records of our foreign commerce showed importation of manufactures in excess of manufactures exported. The following year was the first to swing the pendulum in the opposite direction, and since then the movement has been sustained. It has been most marked during the first eight months of the present calendar year, proving the steady increase in the outward flow of the products of our manufacturing industries.

It is satisfactory, also, to note that the total gain in the duties collected from customs has advanced $7,451,013 for the eight months period, as compared with last year. Practically the whole of this increase was accumulated during the two months of July and August, so that Secretary Shaw's sanguine anticipations are being realized. The Department of Commerce and Labor is responsible for the following forecast: "Should the commercial activity indicated by the August figures continue during the succeeding four months, the calendar year 1905 will show the largest volume of commerce, both as to imports and exports ever recorded."

DON'T MISS THIS WEEK'S FURNITURE SNAPS

Things are getting fairly hot.

From the moment our doors open the influx of shoppers begins.

See for yourself tomorrow how every aisle from the main floor up to the carpet room is busy with housekeepers.

We're going to move. We hope to open our big new store this very month. Nothing, not even the choicest pieces in stock, will be carried to the new location.

Such prices on furniture and carpets have created a veritable panic-rush of buyers.

Don't miss this week's offerings. Read them over. Come and see the goods. Talk it over with your family, compare prices, be critical, and then decide like hundreds of others. The quicker you pick out your goods the wiser and better for yourself.

We carry more than a dozen makes of pianos. The very highest grade pianos cost you only $5 down and $5 monthly.

Another "Jolt" for Mr. Trust

What will become of Mr. Furniture Trust when we get in our new store? You know the location, Main St. near Seventh. There wasn't another spot in town where we could buy space enough. It will be the largest store of any kind in the city—a perfect realm, with all the quick, modern conveniences. The new goods have arrived—50 solid carloads. Take a walk past the store and see the mountains of furniture heaped higher than a two-story house.

Our fight against the Trust will be waged more fiercely than ever. It will be on the score of price—price—price.

Well, when we're ready, we have a surprise for Los Angeles that will delight everybody. So begin to think about it.

CLEVER HOAX BY VAGABOND.

TYROLESE TRAMP MAKES FOOLS OF MANY WISEACRES.

Youth Nabbed by Paris Police Adopts Wonderful Jargon That Was Taken to be Language of Strange Tribe. Telltale Finger Prints Identify Him a Criminal.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.] PARIS, Sept. 26.—Not since De Rougemont fooled the Royal Geographical Society, the Wide World Magazine and the British public generally by his fictitious accounts of adventures among undiscovered tribes of Australian aborigines, has there been such a successful hoax as that by which a young Tyrolese vagabond has duped Parisian magistrates, polyglot linguists and a host of other clever folk.

Brief details of the strange story have doubtless reached America by cable, but now that the exposure has come it is worth recounting at greater length.

Agostino Rinaldo, to give him his real name, was arrested by the Paris police on a charge of vagrancy. He was found sleeping on a bench, and his ragged clothing afforded presumptive evidence that he had been guilty of that heinous offense among civilized peoples—existing without visible means of support. That he had been for some time a stranger to a square meal was shown by his gaunt frame and hollow cheeks.

There was nothing in Rinaldo's face to indicate that he was possessed of a particularly shrewd intelligence. He looked much like many other lads who had led a life of vagabondage. But the rough school in which he had been reared had sharpened his wits more than it does those of most youths who pass through it. And previous experience of prison fare had taught him that it was an extremely unsatisfactory diet for a hungry man. As soon as he found he was nabbed he concocted a scheme to profit by his arrest.

Affecting ignorance of the remarks addressed to him by the minions of the law, the vagabond answered them in an unintelligible jargon. Before the magistrate, M. Roty, he pursued the same tactics. He spoke volubly, but none of the court interpreters could make anything out of it, whereat he merely grinned. Learned philologists and professors of nearly every language were equally baffled by the strange tongue.

Rinaldo, meanwhile, became the hero of the hour. The judge supplied him daily from his own private table, clothed him with a good suit and held receptions daily to which learned men resorted to acquire a smattering of Agrach. All sorts of theories were ventilated in the press to account for him. That which found most acceptance was that he was some species of savage who had escaped from the tutelage of Col. Cody's "Wild West" show, which had been traveling recently in France.

JUDGE LEARNS JARGON.

Scorning the suggestion that the lad was an imposter, the sympathetic judge set himself laboriously to work to acquire a knowledge of his strange language. The prisoner established some connection between himself and "Amard Ritard," which the judge took to be his name. In the same way he arrived at the opinion that the tongue which he spoke was called "Agrach." The judge spent several hours daily with his prisoner, compiling an Agrach-French dictionary. He would draw a picture of a horse, a house, or a tree and jot down the name which the youth gave to it. By this linguistic kindergarten method he fashioned some sort of history of the lad, from which it appeared that at one time he had lived in the midst of a forest—a forest where the tiger roams—by the side of a river. In a steamer with two funnels he had crossed the ocean—and the rest was a dark mystery.

TELL-TALE FINGER PRINTS.

If it had not been for the tell-tale finger prints which have proved the undoing of so many clever rogues, Rinaldo might still have been living in clover with the prospect of some day becoming the author of a rival to Esperanto or Volapuk. While the magistrate was coddling him, M. Bertillon, the chief of the anthropometrical department of the French police, took an impression of his finger prints and then started a search among the criminal archives for the duplicates of them. The denouement was somewhat dramatic.

M. Roty was telling several persons of the progress he had made in mastering Agrach. He had ascertained by means of pictures that the mysterious stranger not only recognized a horse, but he knew how to ride one. And that afternoon he had invited the lad to accompany him on a ride in the Bois de Boulogne, from which Roty anticipated, among other things, a considerable enlargement of his Agrach vocabulary. Then he summoned the youth into the room and ejaculated something that sounded like "Jiggery jaw jampot." He told the company that was Agrach for "How do you do?" The lad replied in words which the magistrate had not heard before and which he hurriedly added to the reams of foolscap which contained his embryo Agrach-French dictionary. At this juncture M. Bertillon rushed into the room.

DENOUEMENT COMES.

"I have found the scoundrel out!" he exclaimed. Then turning to the youth, whose face had not revealed the slightest indication that he understood the meaning of the words, he went on: "Your name is Agostino Rinaldo and you are from the Austrian Tyrol. You have been arrested several times. You served your last term of imprisonment in Marseilles."

Bertillon proceeded to give a list of various petty offenses for which Rinaldo had been imprisoned by the French police. Before he finished speaking the lad realized that the game was up. But it was not penitence that caused him to burst into tears. It was the knowledge that the good things that had been showered upon him would be withdrawn and that he would be thrust forth into a hard, cold world again to make a living by his wits, and that Agrach would not serve him a second time. He acknowledged that that language was a medley of thieves' lingo, Italian and German slang, and words of his own invention.

Among his dupes are several learned philologists, and it will be a long time before their friends cease guying them about it. But the most crestfallen of his victims is M. Roty. He had counted a great deal on the fame he would derive from that Agrach-French dictionary. The jaded Parisians owe Rinaldo something for having provided them with a new sensation, and something left over to laugh at just when the woman who won a million francs in the lottery had ceased to be a nine days' curiosity.

REBATES MASKED AS DAMAGES.

The Claim Department of a Railroad is an Excellent Place to Cover up Rebates.

[Chicago Tribune:] The "nigger" of railway discrimination is scarcely ejected from one woodpile before he is discovered hiding in another. The Interstate Commerce Law requires that the same rates shall be given to all shippers, big or little, and in the printed tariff this requirement is met. The Elkins Law contains stringent provisions in regard to rebates, and rebates in the old form are now seldom paid. But some of the big shippers have been amply compensated for the abolition of the earlier kinds of discrimination by the introduction of the private car line and the private terminal track and sidetrack systems; and it has been developed at the hearing at present going on in the Federal Court in Chicago that the packers have been receiving rebates in the guise of damages. Many thousands of dollars, it appears, have been paid them for injuries to live stock and dressed meats in transit which have never occurred.

There is the best reason for believing that the packers are by no means the only large firms that have been and are receiving rebates disguised as damages. A thorough investigation probably would reveal that rebates are being paid in this form to many other concerns in Chicago and in all parts of the country, despite the earnest protestations of railway managers that the rebate evil is dead. The claim department of a railroad is an excellent place to cover up rebates. Property in course of transportation is constantly being damaged by delays, rough handling and wrecks. It is an easy matter to hand over to a favored customer larger sums than his losses entitle him to, and even regularly to indemnify him for losses never sustained. Such action is plainly as much a violation of the Elkins Law as the direct payment of rebates and should be so treated by the courts.

While the Interstate Commerce Commission and its attorneys are investigating and fighting private car lines, private terminal track and sidetrack systems, and direct rebates, it might be well for them also to take a careful look into railway claim departments. There is good ground for thinking that through examinations of the heads of those departments in regard to the methods they employ will develop facts of much interest to small shippers and the public generally.

Dear Mary Jane
I am awfully anxious to see you I wish you could come out here and spend a week. It is lovely on the farm. The only place for kids There are plenty of fresh eggs and milk and air. I am going to be a farmer when I grow up. Uncle Jack says it is monotonous but any thing grows monotonous to some people, especially poverty. sometimes they grow weary of being rich. I dont know any who does but they grow weary of themselves which is worse. If you have good health and a good disposition and a few thousand dollars a month, you ought to be satisfied I think.

THE VERDICT OF THE GODS.

CHAPTER II.

ON THE TOWER OF VICTORY.

Know, O Seat of Wisdom, that the Tower of Victory, which was to be the scene of Narayan Lal's trial, had been erected a thousand years before by a conqueror to commemorate his victory over the ancestor of the King. It was an eyesore to him. Wither it with his breath he would if he could; pull it down bodily he dared not. For a public monument is hedged in by a tradition that has the force of religion.

No human hand could destroy it. But the will of a higher power could. The King resolved to test that will. Narayan Lal would be its medium.

Now this stone pillar, tall and narrow, was no longer vertical. An earthquake had shaken it out of the perpendicular, till its summit, one hundred cubits (150 feet) high, leaned six cubits to one side. Since its circular base was only four cubits in diameter, this divergence should have been more than sufficient to cast down the pillar; but the unknown portion under the earth lowered the center of gravity somewhat, and thus brought it within support.

How deep this was no one knew. Hence to what height a man might safely ascend—without his added weight, gaining in leverage each foot he climbed, just throwing the center of gravity out of support and overcoming the leverage of the weights of earth upon the base and thereby casting down the whole pillar—was a matter of momentous speculation.

It was a fit theme for the trial.

As Narayan Lal climbed higher and higher the center of gravity would draw inch by inch nearer the edge of the base—till that fatal line were reached. Then the tower would fall, which the King much desired. It would also kill Narayan Lal, which the King equally desired. The will of the gods would be made manifest in both matters.

It was only at the moment of trial that the king publicly declared its natrue. . . . But, O Seat of Wisdom (said the Story-teller unto the Great King) to a pundit and a philosopher the nature of the trial was already known. For had not Narayan Lal's master declared that "on the Tower of Victory" he should meet his fate? . . .

Thus a vast multitude, having heard vague rumours from the twelve guards that had witnessed the scene in the garden, gathered around the pillar; around, yet a hundred cubits afar. Men all, no women; it was anathema for a woman to see the taking of human life.

It was a surging sea of heads, quivering in a ceaseless tremor; white-turbaned, grey-turbaned, yellow-turbaned; the plougher from the fields, the lordling from his wines, the pundit from his musty scrolls. For they scarcely believed that this man would die without a gallant bid for life. About his crime they knew little, and cared less. That was between him and his judge.

"It is said that he had cast eyes upon the beautiful princess," muttered a one-eyed man with a hideous leer and the sign of much opium-smoking upon his bloodless face. "But methinks more had come to pass between the two—which none would care to reveal."

His hearers scouted the base insinuation.

"But this man said he was of Kshattric blood," questioned another. "Then how came he to be the reputed son of Hira Lal of Benares?"

Then a snow-bearded oracle, who had heard much but said little, gave tongue to his thoughts.

"Listen, O brothers, and I will tell you the law. It is written that no man can be a king unless he be a Kshattric, but every Kshattric need not be a king.

"Now, I have heard, or have read from the stars, or the gods themselves have revealed it to me—it matters not which—that five-and-twenty years ago Hira Lal of Benares found a babe floating in wicker basket on the bosom of the Ganges."

A sudden hush fell upon the throng, while each eager eye scanned the speaker's face to read this solemn portent.

"In the basket was a chaplet of pearls, a piece of sandalwood and the sacred thread of the twice-born. The thread he bestowed upon the child on the anniversary of that day, and with the sandalwood he anointed his brow. The chaplet of pearls he gave to the king on the birth of the princess—to be kept for her wedding-day."

"An omen! an omen!" whispered an awestricken voice. "Mavelous are the ways of Parameshwar! Let us see how the omen reveals itself."

The multitude turned their eyes to the pillar at whose base stood the prisoner; from him to the king sitting upon a raised dais two hundred cubits northward, behind which lay like a fallen giant the ruins of the old palace where once had dwelt the conqueror that had built the tower.

The young man bowed to the king, his hands crossed over his breast; yet in his eyes there was a luster that was not all shame. And a faint smile broke upon his lips as he raised his head from the ground. Then, as the guards released him and walked away on either side, he sprang to the first balcony and swung himself to it with his long, lithe arms.

Every seven feet was a circular balcony that could be entered by the narrow winding staircase within the tower. But the prisoner must climb from tier to tier from the outside—with his bare hands. He must be in sight till he reached the last tier. If he did that, and returned safe to earth, his first trial would be over.

And now he stood upon the first balcony, and bowed anew to the king. A sudden silence fell upon the vast multitude as it dawned upon them that indeed the trial had begun. They realized for the first time that a man's life was literally hanging by a thread.

It was scarce an hour before sunset, and the pillar stood out in bold relief against the heavens. It leaned to the westward, so that in falling it might have blotted out the sun. The man's white tunic and white turban shone in the reflected glory of the levelled rays that bathed him in a celestial halo. His whole countenance was transformed in the mystic light. He stood there dominating the populace. He seemed less a doomed convict than a prophet and a judge.

A dim consciousness awoke in the multitude that this man had the aid of a power given to no man in their generation. They remembered the fame of Hira Lal of Bernares, his reputed father, and felt that his mantle had indeed fallen upon this young man who had been sent down the Ganges, no man knew whence. But all men knew that the Ganges flowed from heaven itself.

This was, indeed, the hour of his triumph. So the multitude felt, and would have been cruelly grieved to see him fail and die. That would have seemed the failure of omnipotence itself.

"Brothers!" whispered a man with a catch in his breath, "last night I was returning late from town—even as the guards were closing the gate. Near the tower a strange fear had crept over me; it was silent desolation everywhere. Suddenly, as I drew abreast of the tower, I heard a deep rumbling sound—in the very bowels of the earth. Sounded to me lik ethe mutterings of the dead! I fled to the city-gate, pursued by a thousand terrors."

"A manifestation!" It was a low deep murmur that broke from the throng. For there were some there that had heard of a wondrous legend; that when that tower was built there was a deep cavern beneath its foundations; and that its builder, who lived in the ancient palace on the north was wont to immure in that cavern those members of his own family whom he suspected of aiming at the throne. Verily, it was the spirit of the dead manifesting itself as a warning unto all men!

Thus with mingled fear and wonder they watched the youth as he climbed higher and higher. They saw him pause at each tier, and bow anew to the king. But he was silent and never a sound escaped his lips. Those near enough, or blessed with keen vision, vowed that they saw him smile as he bowed; but they also vowed that th smile was as that of a bride-groom going to meet his bride.

And the king was also silent. Between the two a conflict seems to rage that the multitude could not shape into utterance, yet felt with dumb instinct.

Struck by some sudden inspiration Narayan Lal made the circuit of a balcony. He stopped at the east and bowed to the people there; he stopped at the south and bowed to the people there. He came to the west and bowed to the setting sun.

The sun leaped from a fleeing cloud and smiled upon him. So they will aver to this day, and tell it to their children, and children's children, for an ancient prophecy.

But when seventy cubits from the ground, he was seen to stand upright upon the balustrade and balance himself with distended arms. And he faced the king where he sat upon his throne.

"Ho, brother! see what comes out of his mouth!" exclaimed a spectator on the north.

"It is like a cobweb, and he like a spider," answered another.

For it was a thin ethereal line issuing from his mouth, white against the blue transparent sky. It was so slender that it seemed more like the gossamer lines that float in the mind's eye, than a material, tangible substance. It was there a moment; gone the next; back again the third. It was here, there—everywhere—nowhere.

"It is a thread, a silken thread. It points to the king," exclaimed a third, shading his eyes for a longer vision.

It had grown thicker. It seemed real enough now. It floated in the air in a graceful curve that lengthened every instant, the end sailing northwards towards the king.

Yet there was no breeze. Not a leaf stirred in the stillness of the air.

"No, brothers, it is not a thread. It is a cord!"

Truly, it was as thick as a cord. A moment ago it had been a thread; one rubbed one's eyes to look again—and found it a cord.

"It is not white. It is a dark gray."

True also; the white gossamer had grown into a grey cord. And now it reached full half the distance that lay between the tower and the dais.

"But see, it is not from his mouth. It is from his right hand."

"No, around his turban!"

But before they could decide from where, Narrayan Lal had begun to climb again. He was now seven tiers from the top—six—five—

"See that!" cried out a man, reeling upon his neighbor as if he felt the earth shake beneath his feet.

"What? Where?"

But the look of sudden horror that came to the speaker's eyes answered the words.

The pillar was gently swaying in the air, the slender top writing its last message upon the heavens.

It might have been a passing cloud above that gave the sense of motion. But no cloud returns the way it came. And the pillar-top was retracing its lines against the sky.

The multitude forgot to breathe. Strong men clutched at their hearts, and shook in their nether limbs. A moan here, a deep gurgle there—and some fell senseless in their brethren's arms. Others stood like dazed children, and saw visions. All were hushed in speechless horror.

"Come down! Come down!" a piercing cry broke the stillness.

"Come down!" shrieked a hundred trembling men.

"Come down!" a cry of ten thousand stricken hearts rent the sky.

With his hands upon the third tier, Narayan Lal was seen to waver. He cast his eyes upon the distant throne to know his fate. But a rigid relentless form sat upon it. No softness was in his eyes, no smile upon his lips. No signal of mercy in his arms.

"No! Higher—yet higher! Beloved, thy task is not yet over. Higher—higher!"

It was a shriek, but a shriek of frenzied triumph full of endless hope and infinite faith that no fear could quench. Faint, and yet distinct; near, and yet afar. Standing with their backs to the royal palace, it seemed to the multitude to come from the clouds above.

At the palace window, just beneath the topmost turret of the citadel, a small purple veil lined with diamonds and pearls floated in the air in the levelled rays of the setting sun. Unseen by the multitude that had eyes only for that tragic form upon the tower, it hung against the window sill—a silent message of love, of sympathy, of encouragement. A beacon light to guide him to his destiny.

Narayan Lal saw it—and with a panting heart nerved himself for the last ascent. If die he must, he would die with his beloved's eyes upon him. If rather he was destined to conquer death, she would witness his triumph.

The multitude caught at the hope. One small feeble voice, strengthened by some urging emotion to be heard so clear, had come to their rescue. A while ago they had inwardly sworn their faith in this man's destiny. Now they were saved from its betrayal by one small feeble voice.

"Higher, Narayan Lal!"

"Unto the summit, O Man of Fate!"

In a moment the fickle multitude had forgotten their own perfidy. They now shouted to Narayan Lal to fetch them the stars from the heavens.

In their new-born enthusiasm they recked not that the pillar now shook in a larger curve. All else was forgotten but that toiling form so near its triumph—or death.

"Look again, brothers!" gasped the voice. "It is not a cord. It is a rope!"

"It has grown thicker. It comes nearer the king!"

"I see nothing," muttered another. "You dream, my friends."

They took sides, that vacillating crowd. Some swore by their fathers' beards that it was a rope—that it hung over the king's dais, ten cubits above. The end, they confessed, they could not distinguish. It seemed lost in a kind of haze or mist.

Others stoutly denied that there was anything. It might, perchance be a line of cloud or smoke far up in the air that they mistook for a rope so near.

All eyes were turned toward the end of the rope—real or imaginary. They felt a vague, indefinable sensation, as nervous people do before a thunderstorm. There seemed to be something in the air, heavy and unbreathable; something that deadened the brain and weakened the power of volition; some subtle emanation from a presence other than their own.

"Where is he?" It was a sudden cry from someone that chanced to turn his eyes toward the pillar.

When we witness a balloon ascending the sky we see it last like a black spot hanging from the vault of heaven. It rises higher, and the black spot becomes a speck. Then we rub our eyes, and we guess where we last saw it. We aver it is still there; some of us swear they still see it. The next instant even they are doubtful if it be not a mere remembrance of the retina.

Narayan Lal had disappeared from their ken like such a speck. The last three tiers of the tower were now wrapped in a mist—real or imaginary, none could tell.

Suddenly the mist seemed to clear at the summit; the pointed pinnacle appeared in sight.

"Back! Back, all! The tower falls!" yelled a thousand maddened men.

The pinnacle swept in a rush to the west. . . . But it swung back again to the east.

"Shabash, Narayan!" a brazen throat shouted to the heavens. "He has reached the top! See him—see him!"

The frenzied multitude took up the cry. Some danced, some raved! some fell fainting to the ground.

A shapeless bundle of white emerged for an instant above the mist. It might have been a turbaned head—or only a ball of cloud. It swung with the pinnacle.

To the east the pinnacle rushed . . . not so far as it should have gone . . . reared back suddenly to the zenith. . . . Plunged to the west like a mad horse leaping into a yawning chasm. Hung a moment at the limit of its last sweep—passed it. . . .

The gigantic column cut through the roof of the sky . . . caught up the sinking sun . . . eclipsed it. . . .

A fearful blow smote the earth, and rocked its crest like a shell upon the bosom of the deep. The falling tower bounded anew from the shock, then lay prone like some huge leviathan killed by a mortal thrust.

A cloud of fine dust arose on either side, and spread in a screen around the sun. As if at the touch of a magic wand the fiery orb shut out its rays in bands of red and orange and purple. It was a radiant god embracing the earth in ten thousand arms.

A human groan gave utterance to the pent-up fear.

"Merciful Bhugwan—he is dead! Crushed beneath the tower."

The human sea swayed purposeless a moment, then plunged in a frantic rush toward the head of the column. Suddenly they were checked by a shout.

"The King! The King!"

Circling around, they swept in a whirlwind to the dais.

Tall, towering, pale and emaciated, that aged figure stood erect in silence. His eyes glistened with an unearthly light—the light that men sometimes see in dark places. His breast heaved with some unseen emotion that struggled within and refused to be stifled.

Twice he raised his right hand, and twice he flung it down by his side, muttering unheard words between his lips. The third time the hand seemed held aloft by some unknown power—the left followed it—the two descended together, slowly, gently, till they met before him, palms downward.

A white-clad form was seen to bend before him. It knelt at his feet, caught up the outstretched hands in its own, and pressed them to its lips.

"Behold the face of thy slave, O King! The will of Parameshwar is done!"

Then the people around saw his uplifted face in the last rays of the setting sun.

It was Narayan Lal. . . .

As men walking in their sleep the multitude dispersed.

"But whence came he there?" asked one of another. They were the two guards that sat at the palace gate on the night of Narayan Lal's crime.

"He must have come down the tower by the steps inside," answered the other.

"Then how fell the tower—if he came down before it fell?" persisted the questioner. "Methinks he came down the rope."

"The rope—the rope!" cried out the bystanders.

But there was no rope to be seen now.

"There never was any rope," swore a thoughtless one.

"Pardon, friends, there was—in your minds. You were all like sleeping children, seeing ropes and hearing harps in the air. You were dreaming dreams, my friends. If there was no rope, there was no tower, no king, no Narayan Lal. You saw them all, yet saw nothing. Leastwise, there was the tower, and there was Narayan Lal; and you dreamed many things besides. Go home, good people, and pray the gods to give you understanding."

The figure vanished in the crowd. They recognized the broad trident of Vishnu on his brow, and the scars of self-inflicted wounds. It was Rama Krishna, the pundit.

But at the midnight hour a group of men were gathered together in a den at the outskirts of the town. They were ganja (hemp) smokers, and the lowest idlers of the bazaar—save one. He, in his sober moments, might have seemed to be a man of higher rank, with power in his eyes, and pride in his gait. But sodden with hemp, he was just one of them; his bloodshot eyes blinking in the glimmering light, his sensuous lips drooping downward in important rage at some secret discomfiture, his turban tilted slantingly over his head—so that one side of it hung heavy over his ear.

When the fumes of the drug had heightened their fancy and loosened their tongues, the hemp smokers unfolded a drunken tale.

"Brothers," said one, gazing into the curling smoke above his head even as one gazes into the ink pool to find out hidden things, "that Rama Krishna is no pundit, but a magician. Three nights ago when I was returning to town, I saw the glimmering light upon the ruins of the old palace. No living man would have ventured to approach the spirits in their manifestation.

"But Rama Krishna so dared. For, standing still beneath a tree in much fear, I saw the light die away, and a while after I heard footsteps—coming straight from the ruins! This man passed me by. It was Rama Krishna!"

A sneering laugh answered him. "No magician, but a conspirator! It was no spirit, but Rama Krishna himself that made the light—with a lantern. He was there for his own traitorous purpose; and he showed the light to scare away all prying men."

They turned on the speaker. They knew him to have been once a scribe in the bazaar and to have read many books.

"How dost thou know?"

"Have ye never heard of the chronicles," went on the scribe, "which say that there was a subterraneous tunnel between the old palace and the cavern beneath the tower—along which the conqueror who built the tower would carry away his victims and immure them in the cavern? Indeed, many centuries ago when the old palace was destroyed by a siege, the entrance to the gallery was covered up by the ruins, and its very existence forgotten by the people.

"But Rama Krishna, being a man of learning," continued the scribe with some pride in his own knowledge, "had read the chronicles, and knew about the buried tunnel. For some secret motive he has the cause of Narayan Lal at heart; perchance his own past history is in some mysterious manner connected with that of the youth; how, I may yet learn.

"Thus, as soon as he heard from the guards of the king's resolve to try the youth upon the Tower of Victory, he understood the nature of the ordeal. In the time intervening between the king's resolve and the actual trial, he had secretly visited the ruins by night, dug up the entrance to the gallery, and entered the vault. There he had prepared a communication between the roof of the vault and the foot of the staircase in the tower; and, placing a board over the opening, he had carefully covered it over with loose sand.

"The rest was simple enough. When near the very top of the tower, Narayan Lal seemed to have disappeared from the spectators' gaze in one of those sudden mists that often form at the hour of sunset; he had really entered the staircase inside. Meanwhile his friend beneath had boldly opened out the communication to the vault. To reach it was the work of a minute.

"The foundations, already sunken by the leaning of the tower, had been further undermined by Narayan Lal's friend. And whilst the multitude gaped at the base over the pinnacle, mistaking a ball of cloud for a turbaned head, the two men beneath worked frantically with crowbars and levers. As the tower bent to the west, they ran into the gallery northwards for shelter; as it groaned to the east, they ran out and overthrew a few more stones.

"Thus the oscillations grew wider and wider. When at last the tower came crashing upon the earth, they fled into the tunnel, and escaped to the ruins of the old palace at the back of the king's dais. And whilst yet the multitude were intent upon the affairs in front, they emerged from the ruins and mingled with the throng. Thus fell the tower, my brothers."

"But, how dost thou know?" they asked him again, believing naught of what he had said.

For an answer the scribe brought out from his bosom a crumpled palm-leaf upon which were written these strange words:

"The instrument of the gods awaits thee. In the hour of trial await him. Upon the pinnacle lies death; beneath the sand life. Watch and hope."

"I visited the vault this night, and found the message there. As the two men worked in frenzied haste at the foundations of the tower, this fell out from one of them—which, I cannot tell."

But they eyed him in open suspicion. "Thou art a scribe—and couldst have written it thyself!" Then the scribe put his lips to the hookah, and held his peace—till one by one they left him.

But one remained—he that wore his turban over his ear. "Brother, I believe thee," he whispered into his ear. "And in proof shall buy the message of thee with this gold."

And going out forthwith, he straightened out the palm-leaf and read it anew. Then he took out a jewelled stiletto from under his cloak, wrapped the leaf around it, and placed the two in his girdle.

"One more chain have I around thee, my pretty bird," he muttered between his teeth. "Thou shalt yet meet thy doom. Dost thou serve thy mistress and her lover? Then their fate shall be thine—after I have feasted myself on thee! . . . Curse him! For seventeen years have I watched him, not realising that the cub knew of the father that had begotten him; else I had struck him down a dozen times. Now the cub is full-grown—and claims to be the lion's whelp! . . . But five more trials has he. If he escapes the gods that rule his destiny, he shall not the demons!"

For, if in Rama Krishna Narayan Lal had a hidden friend, in this man he had a secret enemy—a relentless foe who sought the life of the youth since the moment he had so daringly put forth his claim to royal birth. If he escaped his master's wrath and passed triumphant through the perilous ordeals, he was yet in danger from this hidden foe—this assassin's dagger or his poison cup.

"But tell me," the Great King asked of Story-teller, "how thinkest thou Narayan Lal escaped the peril of the tower?"

The Story-teller bowed his head to the ground.

"By the will of Parameshwar, O Light of the Universe!" he murmured.

And I, the faithful chronicler of the Great King, listening from the other side of the couch, can bear testimony to the truth of the Story-teller's words, O best beloved readers. It was indeed some supernatural agency that enabled Narayan to escape this peril. Perhaps he was given some occult power by which he altered the vision of the multitude—making them magnify into a rope a slender thread that he had sent out from his mouth; and, as Rama Krishna said, the multitude imagined many things besides. Do you not know, O best beloved, that a marvelous wonder-worker like Narayan has power to make us see and hear and feel—without eyes, without ears, with senses—in our minds alone? Have you not heard of the other great wonder-worker who cast up a rope in the air? The rope went up unwinding its coils till it suddenly came to a stop with a jerk, its end lost in a kind of mist! Then the juggler's son, a small boy, climbed up the rope, till he too vanished in the mist! But the juggler repeatedly tugged at the rope, muttering mystic words; and the boy's arm came down, the other arm, the legs, the headless trunk, the head itself encircled with the end of the rope. Then the juggler put the pieces together, and the boy came back to life!

And, O best beloved, if you have not heard of this marvel, perhaps you have of the one placed on record in a State paper by a Chief of the Company Bahadur.* This great man saw a juggler cast up a chain in the air, and an elephant climb up by it lost from sight! Thus in like manner, O beloved, could Narayan Lal deceive the vision of the spectators.

But lest you ask me: why did not Narayan Lal flee and escape altogether, instead of presenting himself to his master and thus courting further perils? I say unto you, O best beloved, that thereby Narayan would have proclaimed his guilt beyond a doubt—and sealed the fate of the princess. The princess was upon her trial, no less than Narayan Lal. Thus he submitted himself to a new ordeal far more perilous than this, O best beloved.

"Tell it to me," commanded the Great King.

"With my lips, O Delight of the World," replied the Story-teller.

FURS WILL BE WHITE.

Pelts of the Snow-white Fox the Rage in London's Fashionable Circles.

[London Mail:] Furs as white as driven snow are the moment's novelty. Women who are as averse to wearing peltry of a more somber hue so early in the season appreciate pelterines that are as colorless as the robes they wear; hence at the smartest centers white fox is most in demand, even for the all enveloping motor-mantle.

A coat for the morning walk that reaches the waist at the back and hangs with spade-shaped ends in front, accompanied by a cap to match, frilled beneath the edge where it touches the hair with a "granny" ruffle made of finest lawn and lace, is a possession not to be despised by the girl whom white becomes.

Genuine snow-white fox ranks among the most precious furs, though its price is less than silver and black fox, and its durability is only half as great. The best quality of silver fox costs from £60 to £200 a skin, and two skins are required to make one stole, while for a faultless black skin—a great rarity by the way—as much as £800 has been paid.

The furriers are now selling mainly big wraps and waist-length coats of the Eton shape, trimmed with velvet or leather vests, collars, and cuffs, overlaid with silver, gold and bronze toolings and embroideries. Round boas are more modish than flat ones, and graduate in size from great bulk round the throat to tapering ends.

Sable, seal, and chinchilla maintain their popularity. Their prices are higher than ever, for though the demand for them has augmented lately to a remarkable extent, the supply remains the same. At the last great sale of peltry in London sable and mink (its nearest imitator) had increased 50 to 60 per cent. in price.

This being so, the best and most expert furriers are now dressing less costly skins in such a way that they resemble the premier pelts of the market. They sell them, of course, for what they are. For example, musquash is sold as musquash, though only the eye of the expert can distinguish it from seal. A seal-finished musquash coat of excellent quality will cost £20, whereas if it were made of real seal the price would be at least £40.

Nutria is the bantling among pelts but one that has a very great future before it. It is the fur of a South American rodent, which when dressed resembles that of the beaver, and costs very much less. The new color introduced this autumn for nutria is a rich golden brown that exactly resembles golden beaver.

GOOD CHEER CORNER.

When the Rain is Over.

When the rain is over,
  When the clouds have passed,
And the golden sunshine
  Beams again at last,
All the earth is fairer,
  Every freshened flower
Lifts its head to answer:
  "Thank you, little shower!"

When the shower is over,
  When the rain is done,
Nature's all the sweeter,
  Brighter shines the sun!

When the tears are over,
  When the pain has passed,
And the smiles and dimples
  Come again at last,
Never mind the bruises,
  Laugh away the fears,
Answer like the flowers:
  "Thank you, little tears!"

When the tears are over,
  Smiles come back again;
Life is all the sweeter
  For the drops of rain!

A Bicycle Ride.

Last Sunday, having nothing to do, I got on my bicycle and started out for a ride in Los Angeles. I rode out of Azusa, and before I had ridden half a mile the road came into a wide strip of land, where nothing could be seen in either direction except brush and cactus, and, of course, the distant mountains. This strip of country is a fine place for hunting rabbits. This brush continues for about two and one-half miles, when you turn north for about one-half mile, and then west again.

After turning west you immediately come to the San Gabriel River bridge. If you are on a bicycle, and crossing this bridge, beware of the old nails sticking up, for you are liable to have a puncture on your hands if you don't. After crossing this bridge you go along an oiled road for about three and one-half miles, and then you come into Monrovia.

From there the road is very bad for about two miles and for about one mile you have to walk. The road is all soft clay. After you cross this bad road, you come into Arcadia, or the ranch of E. J. Baldwin, or more commonly known as "Lucky" Baldwin. Then you ride south about one-half mile and come to the county road, which you follow, passing many stately avenues of tall eucalyptus trees, and groves of orange and lemon trees.

Take the road that leads past Alhambra, if you want to ride to Los Angeles on a bicycle. It is just like riding on the streets of Los Angeles. The first sign I saw of Los Angeles was the huge reservoir holding the water supply of Los Angeles. Passing this, I came to Eastlake Park, where I stopped.

It was a very nice ride of twenty-five miles, which I made in two and one-half hours, feeling none the worse for my experience.

CHARLES BOULDIN.

It must have been a very pleasant ride, indeed. Call again, and tell us of other experiences.

An Adventure.

The hero of this tale was a very humble one. He was only a yellow puppy, with a wrinkled black nose, curling tail and short legs. He was a common dog, and as his mother soon died, he was alone and friendless. He had a home, but it was a very poor one, for his masters were of that class who traveled around in wagons as gypsies do.

"Captain" he was named, but "Cap" he was called whenever he was called anything. Cap had a kind disposition, which rarely protested against the kicks he received. Sometimes, however, he stole food when he was very hungry, and then he was beaten unmercifully.

At last Cap decided to go away, but he found the world no kinder. Boys tied cans on his tail, cats fought him, and dogs chased him. Finally, a cow tossed him on her horns and threw him over the fence.

When Cap could walk again, he went home—for the wagon was still home. When he reached the place where it had stood, it was gone, and Cap trotted many miles before he caught it. Then he sank down to rest, but the men soon saw him and were angry. They had only kept him to watch the wagon, and since he did not do that they did not want him.

That night the men visited a large farmhouse and there found a place to fasten Cap. Two old ladies lived in this house, and their little niece, Ethel, was visiting them. In the morning one of them opened the door and a little yellow dog jumped upon her, barking joyfully at his release.

For a week Cap was happy. Ethel petted him, and he grew strong and playful. But our hero had one more obstacle in his path. The Assessor came. Cap's story was told; the Assessor proposed to chloroform him, and they assented.

Ethel was horrified at the thought of killing the dog and took him and ran away to her swing. There her aunts found her crying, with her arm around Cap, and her tears must have changed their intentions, for the Assessor went away satisfied.

Cap had entered his kingdom. He lived there many years, and one day when he was old and blind, Ethel came to see him. He greeted her joyfully, and then fell at her feet dead.

Some Matters of Especial Interest to the Women.

The Making of a Successful Husband.

IV. THE WIFE'S ALLOWANCE—IT WILL PUT MONEY INTO YOUR POCKET AND PEACE INTO YOUR SOUL.

By Casper S. Yost.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

MY DEAR JOHN: Your inquiry reminds me of old Tommy Tucker, who lives around the corner, and who used to be a member of my favorite club. You remember him—the fussy little man, who always wears a high hat and a sack coat, and walks with a strut that makes me think of the turkey gobler of which I was the proud possessor in my boyhood days. Tommy is a gay old boy, very fond of the fair sex in general, and the rights of women used to be one of his favorite topics for discussion at the club. He would talk for hours about the poor downtrodden wives who are little better than the slaves of their husbands, who must grovel on their knees for actual necessities, and who seldom have a dollar of their own from one year's end to another. Tommy's righteous indignation was something fair to see. "Give your wives an allowance, boys," he would say. "Let 'em have money of their own to spend. My wife has had an allowance ever since our marriage, and I tell you it pays." Well, after a while we were astonished to hear one day that Tommy's wife had sued him for divorce on the ground of non-maintainance, and in the proceedings which followed it developed that his much-boasted allowance was the sum of $1 a week, out of which Mrs. Tucker was required to clothe herself. He doesn't belong to our club now, but his chest is as obtrusive and his tile sets at the same angle as of yore.

This question of an allowance is a pretty serious one, and the disposition of the woman in the case enters largely into its consideration. Some women never get beyond childhood, mentally, and prefer to be treated like children all their lives. They know nothing about their husbands' incomes and care less, if they keep them liberally supplied with the luxuries their childish natures demand. With such women there is only one course practicable and that is the ancient and time-honored one which is based on the theory that all women are irresponsible beings and are to be considered property of a higher sort, to be fed and clothed and perhaps regarded with a degree of affection but not to be treated as mental equals nor to be given any active part in domestic administration except as an upper servant. The great trouble is that there are many wives who are treated in this manner who do not deserve to be. The human dolls are, in fact, a mighty small minority of womankind. The supposed limitations of the sex have been fixed in the masculine mind by the customs and prejudices of centuries, and it is pretty hard to change its attitude, but the change is being made and made more rapidly in this country than in any other. We have learned that the average woman has just about as much sense as the average man, and, given the same training and same conditions, she can accomplish equally as much. There seems to be a subtile difference in their mental equipment which enables a woman to reach an instant conclusion by means of something we call intuition, while man arrives at the same point after a laborious process of reasoning, but whether this difference is actually physiological or a curious result of ages of mental repression we are unable to say. But I am wandering from the main issue, and that reminds me of a preacher who used to ride a circuit down in Southern Illinois, and who always preached from the same text. "I like to start from a point with which I am familiar," he would say when asked for an explanation, "but you notice that I never go over the same road and one text is as good as another if you lose sight of it as soon as you get started, as I and most other preachers do."

All I have said thus far is beside the mark, so far as you are concerned, for your wife is no child. As a matter of fact really childish women are comparatively few in number; the fault in a great majority of cases where they are treated as such is the husband's, who can't or won't see the wrong they are doing themselves and their wives by such treatment. It has always seemed to me that the proper view of the marriage relation is one of actual partnership. There should be, so far as practicable, an equal division of labor, an equal division of responsibilities and an equal division of financial returns. The woman's labors and responsibilities should be within the home, the man's, for the greater part, outside of it. Success in her realm is of as much, if not more, importance to both than success in his. A business failure is a small affair when compared with a domestic failure. The one is a mere matter of money, the other affects body, mind and soul. The wife should be supreme within her sphere, but with that supremacy she should accept the responsibilities that belong to it and be held accountable for results. On the other hand she should not interfere in his province, but each should ask for and receive the advice and help and encouragement of the other.

But, you ask, how can this theory be put into practical application. By applying ordinary business principles—principles which, I regret to say, are very seldom applied to domestic affairs in the right way. The trouble is that the average business man runs his home as he would his store, considering his wife as a simple item of expense, an expense which he pays in an irregular way as her needs, expressed or implied, seem to require; or in the form of a fixed allowance. The first method places her in the position of a mendicant or a pensioner, the second improves her standing but makes her relation to him something in the nature of a salaried employé. While the latter is far the better plan of the two, giving the wife as it does a certain independence impossible with the former, it is not, I believe, the true relation, which should be one of equal partnership, as I have said.

If you were going into business with another man as your partner, each having the same interest, it is probable that you would divide the duties of management so as to give each a certain definite responsibility. One of you, perhaps, would have charge of the finances and accounting, the other of the buying and selling. Each in his respective sphere would be supreme, but the profits would be yours jointly, to be held in bulk, reinvested for your joint interest or equally divided as you might elect. With modification, the same system may be applied to the domestic partnership, the husband holding the position of senior, the wife that of junior partner. The husband's department is his business, the wife's is the home. The one produces revenue, the other does not, analogous to the selling and accounting departments of the commercial concern, but the home, like the accounting division, is an essential factor, and, like it again, may be the means of saving or losing money as it is properly or improperly conducted.

I don't want to tire you, but I am very anxious to get my ideas into your noggin straight; then, if you don't like 'em you can do as you please about 'em. You remember the story about the white man and the Indian who went turkey hunting, and divided the game in accordance with the white man's proposition. I won't repeat the story, but you will recollect that the white man got all the turkeys. Some business partnerships and a great many domestic partnerships are managed in this sort of way, and that sort of thing usually ends in a dissolution. If you succeed in life you've got to play square with your partner, and particularly so to the one with whom you've made a life contract, solemnly signed and sealed in the presence of the representative of the Almighty. Give her control of the home and let her understand that she is responsible for its management. Responsibility makes character in a woman just as it does in a man. Let her have a fixed sum every month to pay household expenses as well as to provide for her personal requirements, and allow her to expend the money without question or interference. She'll come to you for advice when she needs it. She will come to you for more money when she needs it, but if the amount is rightly fixed she will seldom have to do that. She will take a pride in keeping within her limit, and more than likely will save more money than you will. In the matter of small economies a woman can beat a man every time, but she must have a personal interest in the saving, must feel that it is hers without restriction. She will probably spend the most of it on you, or will surprise you by digging up a roll as big as your arm some time when you are in desperate need of it. A woman is always trustworthy if she is trusted. The man's point is to make her feel that there is no string tied to the amount given her, that it is hers absolutely, but that she is expected to meet certain expenses.

Suppose, for example, you figure up your fixed charges, as the railroad man would say. Under this head will come your rent, your water license, taxes, insurance, servants' hire, etc. Make a liberal allowance for indefinite expenses, as provisions, clothing, carfare, doctor's bills, repairs, and so on. Take upon yourself the payment of all accounts except the current fluctuating expenses of the household and the personal expenses of your wife. That would give to her the responsibility for the payment of all the bills from the grocer, the butcher, the milk and ice dealers, and other table accounts, as well as her own clothing, etc. Then divide your salary in proportion to the relative expenditures of each. If you assume one-half the expenditure divide your salary equally. If your part of the expenses is three-fifths or three-fourths, reserve that proportion of your income for yourself. That is the plan I have followed for many years, and it has worked well.

Another plan which has its advantages, and which is based like the other on the partnership idea, is to place your salary each week or each month, as you may receive it, in a common receptacle at home. Each of you should have free and unquestioned access to this fund, and whatever is left can be deposited in the bank, from time to time. A memorandum book should be kept with the money and all withdrawals should be properly noted. The advantage of this system is its simplicity. Its disadvantages arise from the dangers of loss by theft or otherwise, and from the fact that it lessens the individual responsibility, and the stimulus to individual saving when compared with the first-mentioned plan. But it's a good scheme nevertheless and vastly superior to the mendicant or allowance methods.

I never believed in the plan of giving all one's salary to one's wife any more than I believe it right for the husband to keep all of it himself. In the first place, it throws upon her a burden that properly belongs to him, in part at least, and, in the second place, it makes it necessary for him to ask her for what he needs, and too often he may be required to explain his needs in detail before he gets it. Some men are so weak that they need restraint of this kind, and for such this method is commendable, but for a man with average backbone it's humiliating to have to ask his wife for money even if he has voluntarily placed himself in durance. It reverses the position of mendicancy and is harder on a man than a woman, because in her case it has the sanction of the ages. I believe in woman's independence, but I don't believe in reversing the traditional relations of the sexes. It is possible to give your wife freedom without enslaving yourself, and a certain amount of starch in your spinal column is just as important under the conditions I have suggested as in any other situation, domestic or otherwise. I know a man whose wife allows him barely enough to pay car fare, and when he wants more he has to make an itemized requisition. She is unquestionably his superior as a financial manager, and is saving money, a feat he never was able to accomplish. But he is unhappy. Her thrift should be a blessing to him, but blessings may become curses if they are worked overtime. He might have taken advantage of her greater thrift and at the same time preserved his self-respect if he had reserved to himself a sufficient amount for his necessary personal expenses and a margin for the unexpected.

Now, my boy, just one more word before I toddle off to bed. Consider your wife as your equal—in every respect. She may not be in some, but she is entitled to the consideration. Consult her about your affairs, tell her your troubles that are worth telling at all and take no liberties yourself you are not willing to grant her, and now, with love to your dear girl, much for yourself, I will bid you good night.

Affectionately, JOHN SNEED.

TO AID THE HOUSEWIVES.

Electricity in the Kitchen Will Do Away With Much of the Drudgery.

[London Telegraph:] What visions the housekeeper must conjure up when told that science is finding a way for her to cook meals and warm apartments by electricity! A duster to take the place of a blacklead brush, no smoky chimneys to vex the soul, no fumes to cause discomfort to the asthmatical, but everything clean and bright and cheerful! When electricity supplies the heat for our rooms the housemaid will no longer dread the advent of winter, with its increase of work, and the cook who prepares food in an electric stove will have lost a grievance. Persons of moderate means must be patient. Electrical science is advancing rapidly, but there is still room for invention before the general adoption of electricity for our cuisine takes place. That we are in sight of remarkable developments there is no doubt, and if only from the point of view of hygiene it is to be hoped that the day is approaching for a much more extended use of electricity in our homes.

At present cooking by electricity is a luxury. Current to furnish the heat is comparatively costly, and at the present high price of metals, particularly copper, suitable stoves can only be manufactured at a high figure. Companies supplying electricity are turning their attention to the problem, and directly a cooker can be produced at a reasonable figure, every encouragement in the shape of low rates of supply will be given to install it in the kitchens of the upper and middle classes. A larger use of electrical power would bring about considerable reduction in price, and within a few months of a really good device being placed on the market, there is no doubt the demand for electrical cookers would be enormous. To induce persons with a genius for invention to turn their attention to the question, the authorities controlling the Electrical Exhibition, which is to open at Olympia on September 23, are offering a prize for electric cookers, and it is hoped that many ingenious suggestions to get over the difficulty of cost will be made. Makers of stoves declare that it is the high price of electricity for heating purposes, which stays the public from experimenting with their appliances, and they point to the success achieved in Switzerland and Germany with electrical ovens and grills. In Switzerland there are hotels in which the whole of the cooking is done entirely by electricity, the current being obtained from spare power generated by waterfalls. Getting their current for practically nothing, the hotel proprietors have installed electric cooking apparatus at a cost of hundreds of pounds, and the results are eminently satisfactory. In this country the current will probably never be so cheap, but as the consumption grows the price is bound to fall, indeed, most of the companies are offering very much reduced rates at the present time, and it will not be their fault if the public do not give the new methods a trial.

One of the best known makers of electric cooking stoves asserts that the latter can only claim an absolute advantage over ranges heated by coal when the unit is charged at a halfpenny. Therefore, the initial outlay for an installation and the charges made for current will have to be very materially lessened before electricity ousts the kitchener in the middle-class residence. Taking the current at 1½d per unit the same authority declares that the electric range scores over the gas or oil cooker, and his estimate for the normal daily consumption of a family of four would be about 5½ units. This would work out at 18s per month for the cost of cooking. There are, however, other considerations which should be brought forward in favor of electricity. In the electric stove there is no process of combustion, smoke, smell and dirt are entirely absent, and the atmosphere of the apartment in which food is prepared for the table is not vitiated by fumes. There are a large number of articles now in use which are heated electrically, and they are daily becoming more popular. Among them may be mentioned bed warmers, footstools, bronchitis kettles, curling irons, coffee roasters, egg boilers, hat irons, laundry irons, shaving pots and teakettles. What could be more simple than the handling of the apparatus for heating hair wavers? A small, artistically finished stand is arranged for the dressing table, and from the base is a length of flexible wire. An adapter put on to an electric light holder gives the current, and the curling iron is heated to a temperature which can never become excessive. The danger of upsetting the small spirit stove, which was formerly the almost indispensable adjunct to a lady's dressing table, is avoided, and at the same time there is no risk of destroying the hair by scorching. An effective range, with a capacity for cooking meals for twelve persons, now costs between £40 and £50. On the continent there are several splendidly equipped bakers' ovens, turning out seventeen hundredweight of bread daily at an average consumption of 14½ units. Their success from a commercial standpoint arises from the fact that they are woked in a neighborhood where electricity is cheap.

It is in the matter of heating by electricity that a big advance is being made in the metropolis. The city is a big field for the makers of radiators. On the third and fourth floors of many large buildings it is almost impossible to get a draught for a combustion stove. In some cases an apparatus has been put in to create a draught and generally speaking, this has resulted in roaring fires, doing damage to the flues without appreciably raising the temperature of the rooms. With the electric radiator heat is given out directly the current is switched on. The advent of the efficient radiator has been very welcome, and two and four lamp stoves are being fitted into offices in large numbers. Four heat-lamp radiators consume less than one unit of electricity per hour, the cost of which would amount to about 3d. With the radiator fitted with two heat-lamps the cost is proportionately reduced. The great advantage of the electric stove is that it is possible without paying any attention to the lights, to keep the temperature of a room to 60 degs. The four-lamp stove being made of copper and brass, is rather costly, but they are supplied on hire, with a separate meter, for 12s 6d a year. The two-lamp radiators and meters can be hired for 7s 6d for a like period.

USES FOR THE APPLE.

Some of the Varied Ways in Which This Health-giving Food Can be Prepared.

Nothing in all our varied and fascinating range of fruits holds quite the quality of the apple, writes Marion Harris Neil in the Philadelphia Press. A ripe raw apple at its best is digested in eighty-five minutes, and the malic acid which gives it its distinctive character stimulates the liver, assists digestion and neutralizes much noxious matter which, if not eliminated, produces eruptions of the skin.

We are told that apples are to be very plentiful this season, so we had better be prepared with plenty of good recipes for using them. There are fortunately many ways of using this valuable appetizing and health-giving food.

APPLE GRIFLE.

Make a syrup by boiling one cup of water with a quarter of a pound of sugar, add one and a half pounds sliced apples. Boil gently till soft. Lift the apples out on to a glass dish. Cook the syrup rapidly until reduced in bulk considerably. Set it aside to cool. Beat up two eggs in a pan, add one ounce of sugar, and a cup of milk, stir them over a slow fire till they thicken, not boil. Pour the syrup over the apples, then add the custard. Whip one cup of thick cream, add one tablespoonful of sugar, then put them into a forcing bag, and decorate the top of the trifle.

APPLE MOLD.

Peel and core one and a half pounds of apples. Cook till soft with the grated rind and juice of half a lemon, and sugar to taste. Take care not to allow them to burn. When cooked to a pulp add four ounces of fine breadcrumbs, and three well-beaten eggs. Butter a mold thickly and dust over the butter with brown bread crumbs. Pour in the mixture. Bake very slowly for one hour. Turn out carefully and serve with custard sauce.

APPLE RINGS.

These make a nice dish for breakfast and are sure to be appreciated. They are quickly and easily prepared. Peel some large and rather tart apples, remove the cores, cut them into slices across about a quarter of an inch thick so as to make "rings." Lay these in very cold water for ten minutes, take them out, drain lightly, dip in fine sugar and then fry a few at a time in enough smoking hot fat to float them. When done, which will only take a minute or two, take up, drain from fat on paper. Pile up on a very hot dish, dust a little sugar over them and serve.

BUTTERED APPLES.

Choose medium-sized fruit, peel and core, but do not slice. Cut rounds of stale bread about half an inch thick and a little larger than the apples, and butter them freely. Place an apple on each, fill up the hole where the core was with sugar, and put a teaspoonful of butter on the top. Stand them all on a greased baking tin, and put into a moderate oven; in the course of fifteen minutes you will have to refill the holes with sugar and a flavoring of cinnamon, putting another piece of butter on the top. Then bake for another quarter of an hour or so, or until the apples are done; the exact time depends on the quality of the fruit. Lift carefully on to a hot dish, and send to table, squeezing a few drops of lemon juice over each apple. Buttered apples are a revelation to those who taste them for the first time.

DIANA PUDDING.

Chop three quarters of a pound of apples finely, put them in a basin, add six ounces sugar, grated rind and juice of half a lemon, three ounces of finely chopped suet, two well-beaten eggs, a quarter of a pound of cake crumbs and a quarter of pound of wheaten breadcrumbs. Mix thoroughly, pour into a buttered mold, cover with a buttered paper. Steam gently for six hours. Serve with any good sauce. This pudding should be an amber-color when cooked. It is exceedingly wholesome.

SHE EATS TOO MUCH.

One of the Reasons Why The Business Woman Breaks Down.

It is often said that the business woman breaks down because she doesn't eat enough.

But that is hardly the real reason, though there is some ground for complaint on that score, too.

Business women break down because, unlike business men, they have not yet learned to shut business worries in the office and leave them there, instead of taking them home with them.

They go business "keyed up;" they remain "keyed up" all day and go home in the same condition.

True, they do not adjourn during business hours for drinks, nor for games of pool or billiards, nor at the day's end to their clubs to rest and smoke and eat a heavy dinner.

The business woman, unfortunately, is apt to take her vocation too seriously, but that is no wonder when one considers what a short time she has been at it.

She is newly emancipated, but for how many years has the man been driving the machinery of the business world?

So long that he has forgotten when he began.

In fact, it is his life. Deprive him of it and the reason of his existence would vanish.

What the woman in business has got to cultivate is a steady going business sense, minus sensibility.

As for not eating enough, the majority of men and women eat too much and they break down more often from the dyspepsia resultant from this cause than from not eating enough.

Work never killed anyone, but worry, despondency, unhealthy living and food have done a lot of harm.

The business woman should eat sensibly and not too much. She should drink good tea and coffee and always plenty of fresh fruit. Then she should insist upon whole-wheat bread instead of white bread. The latter contains very little nutriment and is hard to digest. It is the fashion to decry tea, yet tea is the only stimulant that has no bad reaction. Then she should never pass over the lunch hour without breaking her fast.

If she does, she is making a big mistake and laying up for herself the beginning of that break-down which is considered inevitable, but which can easily be averted by observing a few common-sense health rules.

A light lunch is much better for her digestion than a heavy one, for it must be remembered she has got to go straight back to her work and has no time to take exercise and work off that "logy" feeling.

Now, there are two sensible meals; meals which in European countries would be enough, spread over the twenty-four hours, for a laboring man; but, at 6 o'clock this business woman will sit down to a heavy, hot, course dinner, and then people claim that she doesn't get enough to eat.

As a general thing she eats meat three times every day of her life, and that is twice too often.

That is one of the reasons, if not the principal one of her nervousness, which with increasing years and work, with little relaxation, leads to utter prostration and break-down.

THE CLOTHING PROBLEM.

Frances Power Cobbe was born in Dublin in 1822 and educated at Brighton, and now in her old age is living at Hengwrt, in North Wales. She has been active all her life as a writer and a worker for humane reforms. At the age of 58 she undertaken, in an article on "The Valetudinarianism of Women," to formulate the laws which should govern dress; and here is what she says:

Human clothing should govern raisons d'etre, which, in order of precedence, are these:

I. Health. II. Decency. III. Beauty.

Health demands—

1. Maintenance of proper temperature of the body by exclusion of excessive heat and cold.
2. Protection from injury by rain, snow, dust, dirt, stones to the feet, insects, etc.
3. Preservation of liberty of action to all the organs of the body and freedom from pressure.

Decency demands—

4. Concealment of some portions of the human frame.
5. Distinction between the habiliments of men and women sufficient to avert mistake.
6. Fitness to the age and character of the wearer.
7. Concealment, when possible, of any disgusting personal defect.

Beauty demands—

8. Truthfulness. The dress must be genuine throughout, without any false pads, false hair, or false anything.
9. Graceful forms of drapery.
10. Harmonious colors.
11. Such moderate consistency with prevailing modes of dress as shall produce the impression of sociability and suavity, and avoid that of self-assertion.
12. Individuality; the dress suiting the wearer as if it were an outer body belonging to the same soul.

This is a tabulation of fundamental truths worthy the attention of modistes the world over, and also worthy the attention of every woman of intelligence who desires to dress in a manner that will avoid frumpiness and not endanger health.—[Milwaukee Wisconsin.

ADVICE TO GIRLS.

Do the little things, and then if you have time dream of the great things.

Be natural. Remember there are others as lovely as you are.

Have many friends. A chum usually is disappointing and leaves a sore spot which might have been avoided.

Be conservative. Your acquaintances do not want your confidences.

At all times be womanly. A masculine girl does not retain admiration.

Be careful not to grieve over the wickedness of others; watch yourself, "lest you grow a few sprigs of ungodliness."

Be quick to believe good. Believe the good until the evil is evident.

Remember that you are judged by your actions. "Do noble things, don't dream them all day long."—[Exchange.

Automobile Runs Over Rattlers.

While Percy F. Megargel of Buffalo and David F. Fassett of Lansing, two transcontinental automobile tourists, were passing through Lodge Pole, Neb., they ran into a group of rattlesnakes sunning themselves in the trail.

The sighting of the snakes was too sudden to admit of stopping the flying automobile, and the reptiles were run down. When the rapidly revolving wheels struck the rattlers they were thrown high in the air, one big angry fellow coming down in the tonneau of the car. The brakes were applied and both men jumped out of the car, leaving his snakeship in possession. The rattlesnake finally dropped to the ground, where he was despatched.—[Cheyenne Leader.

HIS MAJESTY REQUESTS THE PRESENCE OF LITTLE NEMO
AND I'VE BROUGHT A LITTLE SPOTTED NIGHT HORSE FOR YOU TO RIDE BUT YOU MUSTN'T WHIP HIM OR DRIVE HIM FAST. DO YOU HEAR?
HIS NAME IS SOMNUS AND HE'S AS GENTLE AS CAN BE
1 LITTLE NEMO HAD JUST FALLEN ASLEEP WHEN AN OOMP APPEARED WHO SAID, "YOU ARE REQUESTED TO APPEAR BEFORE HIS MAJESTY, MORPHEUS OF SLUMBERLAND."
2 NEMO WAS SURPRISED AS WELL AS DELIGHTED TO RECEIVE THE KING'S INVITATION, SO HE SCRAMBLED OUT OF BED AND MOUNTED THE PRANCING PONY WHICH NOW APPEARED SLUMBERLAND IS THE MOST WONDERFUL PLACE IN THE SKY. YOU MUSTN'T MISS A SINGLE THING, SEE IT ALL!
GRACIOUS! WHAT IS THAT?
BE KIND TO HIM, I WARN YOU
COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD
3 "SLUMBERLAND IS A LONG WAY OFF THROUGH MANY MILES OF WEIRD SCENES" SAID OOMP, "BUT BE GOOD TO YOUR HORSE AND YOU WILL ARRIVE THERE SAFE AND SOUND."
4 AFTER TRAVELING SOME THOUSANDS OF MILES HE MET THE OOMP IN DISGUISE WHO CAUTIONED HIM AGAIN TO BE CAREFUL ABOUT SPEEDING HIS FAITHFUL MARE
I'LL RACE YOU TO MOONTOWN WHAT DO YOU SAY?
5 NEMO OBEYED UNTIL HE CAME UP WITH A GREEN KANGAROO WHO CHALLENGED HIM TO A RACE. HE ACCEPTED BECAUSE HE THOUGHT IT WOULD BE SO EASY TO WIN WITH SOMNUS
6 WHEN HE FOUND THE RACE WAS TO BE A FREE-FOR-ALL HURDLE RACE WITH ALL KINDS OF STRANGE LOOKING CREATURES ALSO CONTESTING, HE PROCEEDED TO WITHDRAW FROM IT
7 NOT SO WITH SOMNUS, HER SPUNK WAS UP, NEMO FOUND HER BEYOND HIS CONTROL AND RUNNING AWAY. TRY AS HE MIGHT NEMO COULD NOT HOLD HER BACK
8 THEY FAIRLY FLEW THROUGH THE SKY UNTIL SOMNUS STUMBLED ON A STAR NEMO CLUTCHED AT THE SADDLE BUT COULD NOT HOLD FAST SO OVER HE WENT I WONDER WHAT THE OOMP WILL SAY, OH!
OH PAPA OH MAMA
9 DOWN DOWN DOWN HE SHOT THROUGH MILES AND MILES OF SPACE.
10 OVER AND OVER HE TURNED IN HIS DESCENT CAUSING INTENSE ANGUISH
11 AND BECOMING SO DIZZY THAT HE THOUGHT HE WAS GOING TO DIE HE BEGAN TO SCREAM
12 WHEN HE AWOKE.

THE OPEN SHOP---Desperate Union Leaders Try to Ruin Herbert Geor

CURRENT COMMENT.

THE recent defeat of the Chicago freight handlers, when they were forced to surrender to the employers' terms without a fight, has brought about an alliance. The fight was prevented because the teamsters refused to strike in sympathy, and without their aid a strike by the freight handlers would have been futile. It would have been futile with the two organizations acting in harmony, though there would probably have been a bitter and protracted struggle with a repetition of the violence that marked the teamsters' strike. Both the teamsters and the freight handlers have received a revelation from the other side and have decided to join forces for "offensive and defensive" action. The new combination will be known as the Shipping Trades Alliance, and it is proposed to embrace all organized workers whose occupations bring them into contact in any way with the transfer of freight. Such a consolidation will doubtless be a "good thing" for the labor leaders and walking delegates, but a curse to the workers who are members of it, with the employers organized and prepared for finish fights and public sentiment supporting them.

President P. J. Flannery of the International Freight Handlers' Union, in explaining the purpose of the Shipping Trades Alliance to the truck drivers a few days ago, said that sympathetic action by the freight handlers in the recent teamsters' strike would have at least prolonged that struggle. That is all it would have done—though the Flannerys are always strongly in favor of prolonged struggles, if the existence of the organization is not endangered. They are disastrous to the strikers, but are the golden days in the lives of the strike promoters.

The teamsters and freight handlers have been the two most arrogant unions in Chicago, but both have been taught a lesson. What good it will do them remains to be seen. Little hope is to be entertained that under the consolidation their leaders will not return to the old policy and intolerable dictation. But nothing could better assure their ultimate downfall.

The cloth has raised its voice against labor unionism. That may read like a mixed metaphor, but the cloth has a voice just the same, and it was heard at Freeport, Ill., some days ago, at the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Church. The ministerial delegates denounced labor unionism and advocated the principle of the open shop. The dispatch does not tell us the actual words that were used, but you may set it down for a fact, that when the Methodists get busy there is sure to be something doing. What brought up the subject of unionism is the position in which the Methodist Book Concern of Chicago, the publishing department of the M. E. Church, finds itself as the result of the printers' walkout. It has been forced to issue its publications from another city and is experiencing all the trials of a profane employer.

The preachers condemned the strike of union printers as a demand for unjust working conditions; but was this a discovery by them that unionists demand unjust conditions? The union printers are not the only ones, and must the church itself become a victim before it raises a protesting voice against the intolerance of labor unionism? One of the strangest things in the present day is the silence of the Christian church on a subject which should appeal to it so strongly, if there is anything in the brotherhood of man, of which we hear so much in a general way; or in the mission of the church, which may well be doubted at times.

In an address prepared for the meeting of the Carriage Builders' Association held recently in Philadelphia, David M. Parry attributes the cause of the conflicts between labor and capital to ignorance on the part of the majority of the people of the economic laws. He says: "Once a thorough knowledge of economic laws becomes widespread, these conflicts will cease. No employer or set of employers, no Legislature, no government and not even the labor unions can regulate wages. They are dependent upon economic conditions."

A general knowledge of these laws would make the opposition of the majority of the people to unionism more intelligent, but so far as the unions are concerned we doubt whether the knowledge would make any difference in their policy. Labor unionism is based on an ascending wage scale which is enforced without regard to economic conditions, and it cannot be said that this has always been done in ignorance of these conditions. Gompers, who claims to be a student of economic laws, has time and again urged his followers to resist a reduction in wages when conditions made it inevitable and this has been the almost uniform policy of labor unionism. Gompers goes upon the theory that economic laws may be suspended at will, or an employer is expected to change conditions in order that the unionists may have what they demand. The trouble with unionism is that it is largely a propaganda of ignorance for selfish and exclusive ends.

TRADES UNIONS GET ALARMED.

DON'T LIKE WORKING UNDER CIVIL SERVICE RULES.

National Civic Federation to Investigate Municipal Ownership, Which, in This Country, Means Enforcement of laws Under Which There Can be No Discrimination.

The growing agitation over municipal ownership has decided the executive council of the National Civic Federation, on the request of its department of industrial economics and trade agreements, to appoint a commission to make an investigation in this country and Europe of national and municipal ownership and operation of public utilities, says a report in the New York Sun. The commission, which was appointed yesterday, contains the names of prominent lawyers, business men and heads of large industrial operations all over the country.

One fact, it is stated, has developed since the municipal ownership agitation began, which is that the trades unions are getting alarmed over municipal ownership, which means in this country the enforcement of the civil service laws. Under the civil service laws there can be no discrimination in favor of union men in employing them. The investigation of the commission is to be a very searching one. A statement made on behalf of the Civic Federation yesterday on the subject of the appointment of the commission, says in part:

"The current discussion and acute agitation of this subject indicate its hold upon the popular mind and the necessity for its analytical and comprehensive examination. Its present debate is often inconclusive because of contradictory or unsatisfactory statements of fact. It is intended, therefore, that this investigation shall disclose the actual results of public ownership and operation as far as they have been undertaken in the United States and their more extensive practice in foreign countries. The ascertainment of these facts will afford a solid basis upon which to found discussion and conclusions for the guidance of future policy.

"The scope of this inquiry will cover the relative advantages of public ownership and operation as compared with public ownership and private operation and private ownership and operation. Each system will be examined with regard to its effect upon, among other topics: Wages, hours and conditions of labor; collective bargaining; cost and character of service; political conditions, civil service, spoils system and municipal corruption; financial results; taxation."

The commission will meet early in the fall to arrange upon a plan of operation.

Just Words.

Since the retirement of Senator Martin it is claimed Mr. Morgan of Alabama is the champion "long distance" talker of the Senate. At any rate, the Alabaman frequently comes in for a good bit of chaff in this connection. One day, it is related, Senator Aldrich good-humoredly asked:

"How long, Senator Morgan, could you talk on a subject of which you knew absolutely nothing?"

"Oh," replied Morgan, with a grim smile, "if it was a matter as to which I knew absolutely nothing, I do not think I could talk more than two days."—[Harper's Weekly.

CONSTITUTION AND THE CLOSED SHOP.

A RECENT decision of the Appellate Court of Illinois in regard to a closed-shop contract declares:

"To deprive the laborer and the employer of the right to contract with one another is to violate the constitution of Illinois. It is equally a violation of the 5th and the 14th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States."

In deciding the question of the legality of an agreement demanded by a union, which provided for a closed shop, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania said:

"It comes simply to a question, shall the law of an irresponsible trades union, or shall the organic law of a free commonwealth prevail? The right to the free use of his hands is the workman's property as much as the rich man's right to the income from his factory, houses and lands. His right of acquiring property is an inherent, indefeasible right. To exercise it he must have the unrestricted privilege of work from such employer as he chooses, at such wages as he chooses to accept. This is one of the rights guaranteed him by the constitution of the State and of the United States. It is a right of which the Legislature cannot deprive him, and which the law of no trades union can take from him, and one which it is the bounden duty of the courts to protect. Trades unions may cease to work for reasons satisfactory to their members, but if the combine to prevent others from obtaining work by threats of a strike, or combine to prevent an employer from employing others by means of a strike, they combine to accomplish an unlawful purpose, a purpose as unlawful now as it ever was, though not punishable by indictment. Such combination is a despotic and tyrannical violation of the indefeasible right of labor to acquire property which the courts are bound to restrain. It is utterly subversive of the letter and spirit of the Declaration of Rights. If such combinations be in accord with the law of trades unions, then that law and the organic law of a people of a free commonwealth cannot stand together. One or the other must go down."—[American Industries.

SAN FRANCISCO.

TRY TO RUIN REPUTATION.

Herbert George Object of Malicious Attacks.

But President of the Alliance Pays No Attention.

Drunken Unionist Breaks Leg of His Infant.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—Vicious attempts are being made by the unionist leaders through their organ, the San Francisco Examiner, to ruin the reputation of Herbert George, president of the Citizens' Alliance. After attempting by every conceivable means to derate the Alliance and its leader, but without success, the gang behind the yellow sheet has been faking up mysterious dates with women and trips to resorts with an unsavory reputation.

As this method of attack on the part of the yellow sheet is well known to San Francisco's respectable element, no attention is being paid to the lying stories, any more than to congratulate Mr. George on the stand he is taking in the matter. He pays absolutely no attention to the disgraceful attempt to ruin his honor, simply passing it off in a joking manner, but behind this quiet demeanor there is no doubt a plan in preparation which, when placed in operation, will send the putrid unionists scrambling for cover. This scurrilous attack plainly goes to show that the criminal element which goes to make up the leaders of unionism will stop at nothing to obtain the winning hand in the game they are playing to keep the control of San Francisco in the hands of the anarchistic element.

IN THEIR TRUE COLOR.

As red is the symbol of anarchism, the leaders of the union administration have adopted a fiery red button as the emblem of their campaign. This red Schmitz button is seen so frequently decorating the persons of the shady habitues of the tenderloin that strangers may mistake it for a distinguishing mark worn by order of the police, who are supposed to keep criminals under surveillance. "Look at the button and then look at his face." This is an expression frequently used at the present time when a man with a Schmitz button on the lapel of his coat passes. While a number of deluded citizens of respectability may wear the insignia of graft as presented by the Schmitz campaign button, the suggested test of the character of the great majority of those displaying the emblem of anarchy is perfect. In order to secure their votes the union labor administration has issued orders to the police not to arrest vagrants and opium fiends until after the election. Criminals of the various grades are also to be dealt with leniently by the police authorities. As a result of this policy on the part of the administration in the treatment of its friends and supporters the business of the police courts has fallen off materially, and an imprisoned vagrant or "hop-head" is almost unknown at the Hall of Justice. They all wear Schmitz buttons; hence the frequently repeated suggestion, "Look at the button and then look at his face."

NOBODY WANTS THE BONDS.

John S. Partridge, the nominee of the respectable element for Mayor, in his recent speech before the Mission Federation of Improvement Clubs, drove home a truth that must make any intelligent citizen pause before deciding to vote for Schmitz and his union thugs. The people, he reminded his audience, voted to borrow $17,000,000 on a bond issue for certain improvements. On a certain day these bonds were offered for sale by Mayor Schmitz, but not a single capitalist or financier made a bid for them, although notice of the sale had been sent to every bank, trust company, insurance company and large investor in America. The reason of the refusal of the capitalists to invest in the bonds was that they distrusted the Schmitz union administration and were afraid that if the money were squandered the city would be tempted to repudiate the obligation. For this reason solely, although San Francisco has not one dollar of bonded indebtedness, and although the bonds of small towns in California find a ready sale, the city could obtain no credit. The incident gave the people a striking illustration of the harm done to the city by the administration of the labor unions.

His failure to sell the bonds chagrined Schmitz, for he had been eager to make a political play, while, at the same time, getting so many millions into the hands of the administration. He had visions of fat contracts and large profits for all his favorites; and he perceived that the frosty demeanor of the investors was a blow at him. But he kept a stiff upper lip and insisted that the reason why he could not sell the bonds was not distrust of his administration. Then came the event that demonstrated beyond dispute the truth of the statement that the bad reputation of the union crowd had scared the capitalists from buying the bonds, which were in all other respects a sound and advantageous investment.

GRAFTERS DO NOT CONTROL.

Ex-Mayor James D. Phelan, who has always been keenly interested in the improvement of the city, reminded local capitalists that the money derived from the sale of such of the bonds as were to be issued for the acquisition of lands, and not for the erection of buildings and the improvement of streets, would be handled by the Board of Supervisors, the part of the city's government not under control of the labor leaders, and not by the Mayor, the Board of Works, or any department of the Schmitz administration. Instantly, on this showing, capitalists went into syndicate with Mr. Phelan and purchased all the bonds, the money derived from the sale of which was to be expended, under the law, by the Supervisors. Thus it came about that, in spite of the disrepute of the Schmitz administration, the people got the Mission Park, and are rapidly getting the Presidio extension of Golden Gate Park, the children's playgrounds, and the sites for schoolhouses. Could there be plainer evidence of the fact that the Schmitz administration has destroyed the city's credit? Do the people wish to keep in office and power such a mayor and such an administration?

Policeman Lord "Must Have Been a Dreaming" when he arrested William O'Doherty of 162 Clementina street, who is a good union plumber and a staunch advocate of the Schmitz administration. William's only crime was getting drunk and throwing his infant son against the ceiling sufficiently hard to break its little leg. Pooh! to think that Policeman Lord should so far forget himself as to run the chance of knocking Schmitz out of a vote, or maybe two or three, provided William is deft at the art of "stuffing."

INHUMAN TREATMENT.

Yesterday Mrs. O'Doherty had just 10 cents to buy food for her children, while her husband was drunk as usual. The 10 cents bought a can of soup, but not enough to go around. The baby felt the pangs of hunger and cried. It was still crying at 1 o'clock this morning when O'Doherty threw himself down to sleep, drunk and in an ugly mood. He cursed his child and his wife, and when this did not still the baby's wails he jumped up, tore the infant from its mother's arms and threw it against the ceiling. Mrs. O'Doherty rushed to pick up her little boy, who was now crying more than ever, but could find no bruises. She knew it must have sustained some injury, and started to leave the house for help. O'Doherty threatened to kill her if she moved, and she was forced to sit down and comfort her baby as best she could. From 1 o'clock until 11 this morning she sat in terror of her life and her baby's life, and then, eluding her drunken husband, she escaped from the house and found a policeman.

Dr. Herzog examined the infant and found that its right leg was broken below the knee as a result of the father's unnatural brutality. The little leg was set in miniature splints and the starved child and emaciated mother were given much-needed nourishment. If William has paid his union dues to date he will probably experience no trouble in having his case squashed.

A 'NOTHER UNION ABSCONDER.

A suit has just been begun in the New York Supreme Court by the New York Housesmiths' Union against the United States Fidelity Trust and Guarantee Company, to recover $5000 on a bond issued to insure the treasurer of the union, Walter C. Dawson, who is now missing, having absconded, it is alleged, with moneys belonging to the union, says American Industries. Before leaving, Dawson, it is alleged, got hold of his bond, and taking it to the Fidelity Company's offices, had the surety canceled.

Dawson for a time cut quite a figure in labor circles in New York. He took a leading part in the formation of the Housesmiths' Union, after the troubles arose over the late Sam Parks and his union. Subsequently dissensions arose in the new union, and certain of its officers insisted on being paid their full yearly salaries. The matter was taken to court and an injunction was secured preventing any action as regards the transfer of funds and records to other unions when the New York Housesmiths' Union was dissolved.

The injunction was finally vacated by Justice Marean, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, and that night there was a meeting at the headquarters of the union. Dawson, it is alleged, at this meeting requested of the secretary that he be shown his bond, and so obtained possession of it. The next day Dawson was missing and so was the bond. The union officials subsequently learned, they allege, that the bond had been taken to the offices of the Fidelity Company and canceled. According to the union officers Dawson not only had the bond canceled, but had part of the premium, $39, that had been paid for the year in advance by the union, rebated to himself.

It developed that Dawson also visited the Nassau Trust Company and withdrew the sum of $4161 that was on deposit there to the credit of the union. Supplied with this, the union men say, he abandoned his family and skipped. A search has been kept up for him, but so far he has been able to keep free of the law's clutches. He was heard of in Mexico a few months ago, but has since vanished. The point in dispute in the suit is whether or not the bonding company had a right to cancel the bond of Dawson and escape liability to the union. The latter thinks the Fidelity Company had no right to cancel the bond without its consent.

Persons familiar with the affairs of the union say that it may be shown that Dawson wasn't the only person to profit by the dissolution of the organization.

A LABOR MONOPOLY.

William D. Haywood, secretary of the Western Federation of Miners and one of the leading spirits in the formation of the Industrial Union, says that trades unions are as much out of place in this day and age as the pony express and the stage coach.

"Trade unions," he said, "are nothing more or less than a labor monopoly. They are trusts just as much as the Standard Oil and sugar trusts. They attempt to restrict the supply of labor in order, as they think, to hold up wages. Through the apprentice system they are making tramps of hundreds of young men by denying them the right to learn a trade. They attempt to dictate to employers whom they shall hire and how much they shall pay. They do not permit employers to give young men a chance to better their conditions.

"The American Federation of Labor people say the American Labor Union is too radical. It is due to the fact we have been holding up the trades unions until we are tired of it."—[American Industries.

DICTATION BY UNION TYPOS.

Restriction of Output Typical of All Trades.

Speed Tests are Forbidden by Union Prints.

Restrictions on Employment of Apprentices.

In this correspondence a few days ago some attempt was made to summarize the conclusions of the thousand-page report of the Bureau of Labor on the restriction of output brought to pass by the activities of the labor unions, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Evening Post. A single section of the report—that dealing with the printing and publishing business—contains some interesting illustrations, more or less typical of all the trades.

In discussing the long controversy that attended the introduction of the typesetting machines, against the prejudice of the hand compositors, the report records the testimony of Mr. Donnelly, once president of the International Typograhpical Union, that the introduction of machines has not injured the compositors, but on the whole has been a benefit. There are more printers now than there were before the machines came in. The operatives earn higher wages for a shorter day. The cheapened cost of production has greatly increased the size of the newspapers, and this, in turn, has made the extra work, an experience which happens with nearly all of the most dreaded labor-saving devices of the world.

In the earlier days of the machine, speed contests were encouraged by publishers and by the company introducing the new device. Extraordinary records were made in these contests, which doubtless had an influence in establishing the standard of work. Accordingly the International Typographical Union adopted a rule, declaring that no member should engage in speed contests, either in hand or machine composition. Any one who violates this rule is punished by a fine of not less than $25, or he may be suspended. The bureau reports that this has been so rigidly enforced that practically no speed contests have taken place in the last five years.

Of the 1189 daily and weekly papers printed in union offices in the United States and Canada, in only 190, or about one-sixth, is payment permitted by the piece, or according to the amount of work done. It appears, however, that the average rate of composition is 15 per cent. faster on piece work than on time work. The prohibition of this method of payment for machine operators thus amounts to a restriction on output; but there are certain qualifications to be noted. New York publishers generally assert that they prefer the time system because of the greater elasticity in shifting a man from one kind of work to another. Considerable office friction is avoided by it. In fact, one of the publishers told the labor bureau agent that he did not want the "swift" in his composing room. "The fast machine-man is not an all-round workman. If he sets very much more than the average he is unpopular in the office, and this makes it unpleasant all around. At the same time, I think the union ought to take more interest in holding its men up to a reasonable standard. The general average in my composing room has gone down gradually as a result of the union idea of making work for more men and of protecting the old men."

The unions have had to decide what constituted a fair day's work, and this led to the so-called "dead line," or the minimum daily product which entitled an operator to employment. It is the standard of competency below which the union would not insist upon the employment of a man, or at least of the payment to him of the union scale. In one city where a dead line is in vogue the union pays back to any publisher at a piece rate the difference between the minimum scale and the amount less than that which is done by any operator whom the union furnishes. This makes the union as averse as the employers to men who fall below that standard. At the Washington convention of 1903 the dead-line provision was repealed, and there is no longer official objection to one established by employers, although the president of the union asserted that he would not permit one too high to be set, for the purpose of running certain employés out of an office.

The Hebrew Typographical unions have furnished the most extreme examples of dividing up work to keep everybody employed. In New York City the Hebrew union scale is fixed on a basis of forty-eight hours per week. The men actually work twenty-four hours a week. Two men do the eight hours' work agreed upon with the employers as the basis of the day's wage, and then divide the proceeds between them. This is the outgrowth of the introduction of the machines. The men were formerly getting $14 for forty-eight hours' hand work. Their union contains about one hundred members, and it was decided to divide the work among them at the new rate of $26 for forty-eight hours on the machine, with the result that these four-hour men now get $13 a week, or practically the same wages as before. This is given as an example of the extreme of fraternal spirit. Something like it is the rule of the New York Typographical Union that any member who has eight hours overtime in any week must "lay off" one day, giving that to a "sub."

The New York local forbids apprentices on morning or afternoon newspapers, and the report says this rule is strictly enforced in all union offices, except where a few apprentices were held over when the office was unionized. The scale of wages in New York is so high that publishers are able to secure the most expert help from all parts of the country, and it is in this way that they obtain new employés. But what becomes of the New York boys who want to learn this trade?

The absolute prohibition of apprentices in daily newspaper offices is confined, according to this report, to New York City and to Philadelphia. In Chicago, the question was submitted to arbitration, the union asking a ratio of 1 to 7, and the publishers desiring 1 to 5. This was finally compromised at 1 to 10, or better terms than the union had asked for, and this provision appears in the contract with the Publishers' Association as section seven. Accurately stated, there may be one apprentice for each ten journeymen, or fractional part thereof, the average number of employés affording the basis of computation, but no office can have more than six apprentices at one time. Chicago, like New York would be badly off did it not draw on the country. The term of apprenticeship is five years, and apprentices are not allowed to practice on machines until the last three months of their apprenticeship. The Mergenthaler Company has held that it could teach any intelligent man to operate a machine in thirty days. These apprentice restrictions, both as to number and period, thus serve greatly to lessen the effectiveness of human hands, which from the economist's point of view is an extraordinary way of increasing social well-being.

REAL OBJECT IS HIGHER WAGES.

DEMAND OF THE COAL MINERS FOR SHORTER HOURS.

If Granted by the Operators It Would Result Simply in Raising the Wages Again and Increasing Still More the Price of Coal to the Consumer.

There is to be a convention of mine workers of the three anthracite districts of Pennsylvania at Shamokin on the fourteenth of December, and it is openly proclaimed that demands upon the mine owners and operators are to be made, among which is a uniform eight-hour workday in the anthracite mines. This is what the demand on the face of it appears to be, but, as we understand it, a uniform working day of eight hours throughout the year is impracticable in coal mining. On account of the difference of demand in different parts of the year and the difficulty of storing and transporting so bulky a material so as to equalize distribution, production is necessarily irregular. It is not practicable in the anthracite region to adjust the labor force to requirements by varying the number of men employed and keeping all at work so many hours a day and so many days in the year. There are times when not all the men are working and times when men are working part time. There may be busy seasons of working overtime.

According to the report of the Strike Commission of 1902, when the regular workday was ten hours, the average time actually worked was less than eight hours a day, says the New York Journal of Commerce. This was true of the contract miners, whose wages depend upon the quantity of coal mined, and it was also true of the "company men," whose wages are reckoned by the day. There were days when men worked their full ten hours, there were days when they worked part time, and there were days when many of them did not work at all, but the average was less than eight hours for 258 days in the year. This irregularity of employment still prevails and is said to be unavoidable. If under a ten-hour system the average time worked was less than eight hours, and if under the nine-hour system established by the commission's award this has continued, what would be the effect of an eight-hour system? In the general application of the term this means eight hours' work every working day, which is practicable in most industrial establishments, but not, as we understand it, in anthracite mines. An average is not satisfactory for reckoning the length of working days, but where uniformity is impracticable, to establish eight hours as the limit is simply to fix a maximum of time for the day's wages.

This effect gives the clew to the meaning of the reduction from ten hours to nine and of the demand for a further reduction to eight. When the workday in the mines was ten hours it meant that wages of $1.50 a day were for ten hours and they were paid ratably for the time worked. It meant virtually 15 cents an hour as the cost of this grade of labor, and the average time, which was less than eight hours a day, determined the cost of the labor throughout the year. When the day was reduced to nine hours the result was not less work on the average, but, as the daily wages remained the same, an increase of the rate per hour and an increase in the cost of the same amount of labor for the year by 11 1-9 per cent. It was really an increase of wages to that extent. If now the day should be reduced to eight hours, without a change in the daily rate of wages, while the actual work was sometimes more, with pay for overtime, and sometimes less, but on the average within the eight-hour limit, it would really mean a proportionate increase in wages, which are virtually reckoned and paid by the hour, though nominally by the day. Compliance with the demand would not establish a uniform working day of eight hours with a fixed rate of wages comformable to the time worked. It would not change the time actually worked in the year, but would result in another increase in wages, which would mean a corresponding increase in the cost of mining and probably in the price of coal.

National Reserves

National Reserves of Timber.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

THE problem of a future lumber supply is one of the greatest that confronts the nation. While our [illegible] are being denuded faster than [illegible] can ever be restored, there is a [illegible] increasing demand for lumber, and scientific forestry is finding [illegible] field of endeavor in its ex[illegible] to meet the situation. Our national forest reserves are only about [illegible] years old. They aggregate [illegible] than 60,000,000 acres, and most [illegible] west of the Rocky Moun[illegible]

The Bureau of Forestry is one of the most important in the national government, and is closely allied with the [illegible] of Agriculture in its work. In [illegible] of the rapid decrease in our forests, lumbering still holds the fourth [illegible] among the industries of the United States, and more than $100,-[illegible] are paid out to lumbermen annually in wages.

It is also closely allied to the labor question. Eastern capitalists often express surprise that lumber and building materials are so high in price on the verge of the great forests of the West. So far, this is not because of the scarcity of timber, but [illegible] there are not enough mills [illegible] to supply the demand of [illegible] market elsewhere and at home. [illegible] this reason, much green material [illegible] into buildings where well-seasoned stuff only should be used, as a sufficient supply cannot be set [illegible] to allow time for proper seasoning.

In fact, few questions are more far reaching than this one of forest reserves. It is interwoven with the economy of lumbermen. The steady growth of our cities is dependent on the supply of lumber. It is declared by some that the denudation of the Rocky Mountains would decrease the natural water storage capacity of the high altitudes, but the opinion of the majority seems to be that the natural storage reservoirs are largely dependent upon the forests, and that in [illegible] places on the eastern slopes of the mountains of Colorado and New Mexico the snow fall is becoming more and more intermittent, and the [illegible] are often bare in March or April. This weaves into the warp of the subject of irrigation as well.

[illegible] of the Northwest.

The greatest timber resources of the United States are those of the Pacific [illegible]. The standing timber of [illegible], Oregon, and Northern California at present is twice that of the original timber lands of the North-[illegible] States. But the careful [illegible] looks into the future. He does not wait till his supply of a [illegible] is exhausted before he begins to plan for its renewal.

The famous pictures of life in the lumber camps of Maine will soon live only in history, and this is fast com-[illegible] is true also of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Saginaw [illegible]. No one who looks only at the [illegible] output of lumber from our [illegible] shipping centers can realize any [illegible] supply; it is only when he re[illegible] that such output takes from [illegible] supply in exact proportion to its [illegible], and that practically the [illegible] lies in reforesting, that [illegible] to see the great future of [illegible] of National Government.

[illegible] River, Lake and Sea.

[illegible] of the world have been re[illegible] to the mammoth rafts [illegible] that are being towed across [illegible]. Rafting is a universal [illegible] conveyance, and such rafts [illegible] a very important part in [illegible]. In the south, the lumbermen [illegible] and live on rafts bound [illegible] ports. On the Mississippi [illegible] Rivers it is a [illegible] sight to watch the great [illegible] bulk of loose logs cor[illegible] encircling ones chained to[illegible] in charge of a busy tug [illegible] back and forth ahead of the [illegible] the floating mass and [illegible] the current. The use [illegible] in the shape of strong search lights has greatly lessened the danger of the work in recent years.

Formerly the logs were brought down the Great Lakes and rivers in rafts to the saw mills. Now, instead of the mountain going to Mohammet, Mohammet goes to the mountain; the mills are located in the lumbering districts, and the resultant lumber is shipped. Sometimes there is a million feet in a single cargo. Fourteen harbors on the American side of the Great Lakes are lumber-receiving ports. Chicago has handled more than 500,000,000 feet of lumber in a year. Tonawanda, the distributing port near Buffalo for much of the lumber used in the East, has received as much as 7,000,000 feet in one day. A modern railroad car can carry 40,000 feet.

Rafting on the Pacific Coast differs from the rafting on the Great Lakes and rivers in the enormous size of the cribs. These giant log rafts could not be constructed elsewhere. It would be impossible to obtain the requisite number and size of the timbers used, and, in any other quarter of the globe, such logs would command a price that would prohibit taking such risks of transportation. It is only in the marvelous forests of the Pacific northwest that the supply could be had for these giant rafts.

The Pioneer of Ocean Rafts.

It is an interesting fact that the idea of the monster log raft did not originate on the western coast. Its inventor, Mr. Hugh R. Robertson, was a resident of St. John, New Brunswick, Canada. He built his pioneer raft—larger every way than anything which had been built up to that time—at Juggins, Nova Scotia. It was a structure 560 feet long and 35 feet deep. His fundamental principle is today the chief distinctive characteristic, and lies in its novel form, which is cigar shaped. His first venture, like many another, came to grief, on the way to New York. But it is the men who fail and try again who are the successful men of the world, not those who never fail, and he tried again and succeeded. His second structure made a successful journey of 700 miles in ten days, and later, Mr. Robertson believing in the vast resources of the Pacific Coast, left the eastern coast for the western.

The tendency in raft building as in ship construction has been constantly toward increase in size. The earlier ones were about 300 feet in length. A recent one was over 700 feet in length and 50 feet wide.

In Middle California.

Lumbering interests are closely allied to the prosperity of California. It is a commonly accepted theory that the forests of Washington, Oregon and Northern California shut out of any comparison those of the central part of the State. Yet there are in Central California lumber firms that ship their products around the world, and far off the line of tourist travel there are forests of big trees that outrival the big trees of sight-seeing fame, forests that are almost virgin to the eye of man because of their present inaccessibility. But it is only a matter of a short time before these dim aisles will also ring with the sound of the woodman's axe.

A Forest Fire Scene.

Forestry experts and large individual owners are now grappling with the problem of fighting forest fires. No one who has not been an eye witness of such a conflagration can have any due appreciation of its awfulness. One of the memories that will never fade from my mind is that of a great forest fire in a Northern Michigan pine woods. Often the railroad right-of-way is the only cleared space for miles, and paralyzed with terror, wild animals gathered on the track and positively refused to get off until driven away by trainmen. Windows and ventilators of the cars all had to be tightly closed, and the glass of the windows was hot to the touch and the paint blistered on the outside of the cars. Dangerous, yes, but we had to go on. Whole villages were deserted, while men, women and children were out fighting the fire that threatened to sweep away their homes and in many cases did so. Acres of blackened tree trunks leaning against one another, too close together to fall prone, looking like the embodiment of desolation, and at night it was like a demon's revelry. All this in a locality of towns and homes. But on our mountain wilds a forest fire is even more destructive and terrible because of the lack of control.

In addition to the plans for the prevention of forest fires, the Bureau of Forestry gives directions for the proper care of young trees and seedlings for the planting of extensive tracts of land, and incidentally considers the water supply and the grazing interests. Then, as long as self interest shall actuate mankind, there will be disputes between herd owners as to grazing lands, and as whether or not the animals damage the young growth, while boundaries and water rights will have to be settled. Certain it is that the handling of vast forest areas by the government on scientific lines and with a single eye to the general good, has already effected a great saving in the country's resources, as well as proving an economic gain to the lumberman.

HINTS FROM OUR CONSULS.

Importance of Foreign Patents.

Robert Grimshaw, a well known American residing in Hanover, Germany, writes to Consul-General Mason on the importance of American manufacturers securing patents on articles exported abroad when such articles are patentable. In part his letter is as follows:

"I have often had occasion to write American manufacturers and exporters on the subject of having what they have to sell in Europe patented in the countries where they wish to sell them, and in some cases what I have to say has taken effect. But I should be glad of an opportunity to say, for the benefit of manufacturers as a class and for that of American export trade as a whole, some of the things that I have said from time to time to individuals. From the point of view of the manufacturer patenting is desirable, because it prevents the foreigner from doing what he has otherwise every legal right to do at any time that he sees that a foreign invention is meeting with success, and possibly success at his expense, in that it is being sold in his territory and supplanting his own products, viz. make and use of it.

"From the point of view of the selling agent in Europe, who is asked to spend time and money doing missionary work, the desirability of patenting the new thing is evident from the first, and the conviction strengthens with the success of the agent in the unprotected territory. For the manufacturer has at least the protection of home patents, and if through leaving himself unprotected he loses his foreign fields, he has at least his own country to work in with no one to say him nay. But the selling agent abroad, who has put in hard work to convince a very conservative public of the superiority of the new thing (a task which is none of the lightest, especially if there is a marked difference in first cost against the novelty) is cut out completely. This digging wells half down to water is seldom relished even by the most philosophic and philanthropic of agents."

Favoring Greek Currants.

The commercial agreement between Greece and Great Britain of November 23, 1904, makes important concessions to British products. A copy of this agreement is furnished by Mr. Charles S. Wilson, American Minister at Athens. One of the provisions in the declaration reads:

"The government of Newfoundland agrees to recommend to the Parliament of Newfoundland the admission duty free of currants and sultanas, the produce of the Hellenic kingdom, imported into Newfoundland, in return for the reduction by the Greek government of the duty on Newfoundland codfish imported into Greece to five francs per hundred okes."

It is further stipulated that goods produced or manufactured in any part of the British Empire shall enjoy "complete and unconditional most-favored-nation treatment" so long as the same treatment shall be accorded to goods of Greek origin and manufacture.

The Packing of Goods.

It is interesting to note the British Trade Review publishing an article from Hon. R. W. Best, of Victoria, Australia, calling attention to the fact that the United States packs its goods in better boxes and in cartons better fitted for the purpose of sale than does Great Britain. For a long time it looked as if American merchants and manufacturers would have to wait years before they would be able to equal European packers in putting up goods. While the words of the Review will not cause any abatement in the efforts of our merchants and manufacturers to excel, they certainly ought to have the effect of encouraging them to maintain the high standard recorder. In part the article says: "In the boxing or 'get-up' of small goods the United States manufacturers excel. They use cardboard boxes in numerous instances where the British pack in brown paper parcels, and the United States practice is held to be preferable, for the reason that the box is suitable for placing on the shelves of a shop. As regards the goods which are packed in boxes in Great Britain and the United States, the boxing is nearly always better done in the latter country, the boxes being stronger and more sightly. British goods can commonly be picked out in the stock of a hardware store by the greater number of broken boxes. The excellence of the manila paper and cardboard boxes used in the United States has been a considerable factor in advancing American trade."

Effects of Germany's New Tariff.

Mr. Bernstein, a member of the German National House of Representatives, recently addressed a large public meeting at Frankfort-on-the-Main. The gentleman declared that the new commercial treaties will have a very injurious effect on Germany's manufacturing and export trade. The working class particularly will suffer, as their opportunities for employment will be diminished by the transplanting of many German manufacturing works to foreign countries, as they will not be able to export to these countries profitably, owing to the increased duties under the tariff schedules of the new treaties. Reduction of the wage scale, increase in the cost of living, consequent diminution of consumption and lack of employment will occur when the new treaties are in operation.

Mr. Bernstein calculated that the increased cost of bread for a family of five persons will be $14 per annum under the new tariff law, a heavy burden when one considers the low wages and the prospectively reduced earnings of the laboring people of Germany. The speaker favored the making of a commercial treaty with the United States if the latter is willing. "We can not, however, force them to do so," he said. "To engage in a tariff war with the United States would be assuming a fearful responsibility, even when account is taken only of the 500,000 operatives employed in Germany's cotton textile industries."

Indigo Growing Industry.

According to a consular report from Simla, India, efforts are being made to save the indigo growers from the German manufacturers of artificial indigo. Lord Curzon urged the Indian indigo farmers to find ways of getting more coloring matter from their harvests by introducing scientific methods of selecting and caring for the plants. It was also suggested that a factory for preparing the coloring matter would pay better than money expended on the farms. All the indigo plants could be collected at such a factory and there treated in such a way as to secure the best results. A combination of both plans it is thought would be best, and might result in India maintaining its position in the world's markets.

BEES AS MESSENGERS.

How the Honey Makers Can be Made to Play the Part of Homing Pigeons.

A very curious and interesting investigation has been going on for some time past among naturalists with regard to the senses of the lower animals. It has been found that in most cases these are very different from ours, and it cannot any longer be denied that instances occur in which special senses that are not possessed by human beings are developed in animals. One of these, called "the sense of direction," enables bees to return from long distances to hives, unaided by any of the five different ways we have of recognizing our surroundings.

To test this matter thoroughly, the fertile honeymakers have been taken considerable distances from their hives, to localities which it was certain that they had never before visited; yet when set free they flew as unhesitatingly, as directly and as unerringly home as from places perfectly known to them.

A few days ago it occured to a well-known beekeeper that this remarkable ability on the part of bees might be made useful. Convincing himself that he could rely upon their speedy return from anywhere within the range of three or four miles from their hives, whether they had ever been at the place from which they started homeward, or not, he set to work to test their ability to carry messages, as do homing pigeons. He procured a few bees from a friend who lived on the farther side of a barren sandy tract of land, which, offering no inducements in the way of possible food supplies, was never visited by the insects, and crossed over to his own home.

Going to his garden with his children he touched certain tiny packages, prepared for the occasion, with birdlime—this to make them adhere to the backs of the bees. The packages consisted of the thinnest paper, fastened with the thinnest of thread and done up in the smallest parcels possible, and upon the paper were written, in minute handwriting, certain messages from his two little girls.

Releasing the bees, one by one, from the pasteboard box in which they had been imprisoned, he fastened with a trained hand each of the little packets to the back of a bee, which he then allowed to fly away.

Like homing pigeons, they started off at once across the unfamiliar desert for their home, arriving there in an incredibly short space of time with their packages secure upon their backs.

Commerce the Foe of War.

The commercial union of the world now in process of development and proceeding in ever-increasing ratio of certainty and speed, through the extension of transportation lines and the opening of regions that from the birth of the race till now have lain fallow, is making more and more abhorrent the idea of destructive and too commonly fruitless contests, which interrupt industry, reverse prosperity, destroy enterprise, increase disease and crime and burden the masses with the obligations of sacrifice. Better yet is the growing tolerance which is felt by people of one race and faith for those whom bigotry and tradition have consigned as opponents.—[Brooklyn Eagle.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE SOUTHWEST

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

ONE of the infant industries of Southern California that is being developed in a small way at The Palms is the manufacture of eucalyptus oil. In that thriving little settlement, F. E. Schueddig has set up his laboratory and erected a still capable of handling half a ton of leaves per day. From those he manufactures a triple-distilled oil for which he finds a ready market. His little plant was put in operation four years ago, and he is certain that the industry is rich in promise. He says Southern California is to be congratulated in that nearly all of the eucalyptus trees planted by the pioneers are of the Globulus variety. It was selected chiefly on account of its rapid wood-growing qualities, but it happens also to be the most important one of the more than one hundred and fifty known varieties for medicinal purposes. It is richer in cineol, or eucalyptol, than any of the other species.

The use of this oil is growing and practically the entire supply is imported from Australia. Heretofore there has been no thought of growing the trees here for their oils, but there is no reason why it should not be profitably done, as ten moderate-sized trees will yield a ton of leaves and there are not less than 300 trees to the acre. The California oil is better and purer than that which is imported, for by distilling the oil from trees of one species a more reliable oil is obtained. In Australia the trees grow wild. They are of numerous varities and the oil is necessarily a conglomerate. The oils from the different trees differ in composition, and to obtain the best results in medicinal properties the leaves from trees of each variety should be kept and distilled separately.

According to noted authorities the leaves of the Eucalyptus Globulus yield more crude oil to the ton than are secured from those of any other variety, and this variety flourishes here, although there are forty other kinds to be found in the State.

Mr. Schueddig, in explaining the process employed in extracting the oil from the leaves, says the leaves and small twigs are placed in a wooden box or tank of any desired size and then steam is passed through them, the steam entering at the bottom of the vat or box and being diffused evenly through the leaves. The action of the steam softens the tissues of the oil cells, and at the same time by its heat causes an expansion of the particles of oil so that they burst from their minute prisons and are carried off by the current of steam. The oil-charged steam upon reaching the top escapes into a condensing apparatus where it assumes the form of oil and water. The oil is readily drawn off, and the process employed thereafter is the secret of the manufacturer, although it is known the oil is stripped of about 13 per cent. of deleterious impurities consisting of eucalyptus tar, wood alcohol, prussic acid, aldehyde and a fatty acid not definitely determined. The tar is the only by-product that is saved, it containing valuable medicinal properties for salves for horses.

It is found that the distillation is best done with the partly dried leaves, since there is no loss of oil by thorough drying. The oil is so tightly sealed in the tiny cells that a force greater than the rays of the sun or the atmosphere is required to free it. The distillation requires a period of about fourteen days.

It has been suggested that owners of eucalyptus groves could realize a profit from the distillation of the leaves from their own trees. They would find a ready market for the crude oil at the refinery and the apparatus required would be simple and inexpensive. The work is not hard. A ton of leaves will yield from twenty to twenty-four pounds of crude oil. Or, if the grower does not care to attend to the distillation, there is a market for the leaves, they commanding from $1.75 to $2.50 per ton.

Vegetable Growers' Association.

Three months ago the vegetable growers of La Habra valley—about forty in number—formed an association which was a success from the start. If there is a frostless belt in the State it is La Habra valley, a most desirable location for growing both early and late vegetables of every description. Before the producers organized they found that the commission men would take advantage of them often in sales, and the farmers decided to form a union for self protection and to place their own sales agent right in Los Angeles. A number of stalls were rented in one of the markets and the new organization is proving to be one of the most successful concerns in Los Angeles and has no trouble in disposing of the produce raised by its forty members at prices that net big profits. The association is now in favor of uniting with the vegetable growers of both Orange and Los Angeles counties in the formation of one big exchange.

R. N. Hudson, president of the La Habra association, and J. G. Launer, another member, are now interesting the vegetable growers of Fullerton and Anaheim and the directors of the Fullerton Vegetable Association and the La Habra association will take up the matter of working with one another, even if no further steps are taken at present. A meeting will be held with the Anaheim growers later and then the proposition will be submitted to the growers of Hollywood and other towns in Los Angeles county, until every vegetable and small fruit growing section in that county has been interested in the new union.

Fullerton now has a most successful vegetable growers association with over forty members and they do not hesitate in saying the have saved thousands of dollars by uniting under one head.

Mr. Hudson believes his association will be successful in uniting the growers of both counties in one general exchange, with branch organizations in each section.

LOOKING BACKWARD

Hamburgers started in business in 1881, threw open the doors of our modest shop—a room 20x60 feet—invited the public patronage and confidence and promised in return to sell always and only "TRUSTWORTHY MERCHANDISE AT LOWEST PRICES." From a single room we enlarged our space from time to time to meet the increasing trade of an appreciative public, and now occupy a frontage of 185 feet with five floors devoted exclusively to our retail business. To assemble under our roof the world's best products and distribute same at the minimum profit has been our constant aim and that we have succeeded is best attested by the fact that our five floors of retail selling space is wholly inadequate for our marvelous business.

LOOKING FORWARD

Work is about to be commenced on the future Hamburger Store. In a few months the public will be enabled to concentrate ALL their shopping in the new store—the largest of its kind West of Chicago—and stocked and equipped second to none in the world. This magnificent store will have a frontage of 305½ feet on Broadway, 165 feet on Eighth St. and 124 feet on Hill St. It will be an absolutely fireproof building and will cost almost $1,500,000.00. From time to time as the great work progresses it will be our pleasure to keep our patrons informed of our plans and purposes to the end that the perfect oneness of interests which now obtains between the public and ourselves may be maintained and strengthened.

SCIENCE.

Psychology.

AN INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGY. By J. Clark Murray. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Since the time of man's coming to that stage of evolution when first there dawned upon him the consciousness of individuality, he has believed that the proper study of mankind is man. This study is divided, as it were, into two courses; the first including the investigation of himself, the second that of his neighbor. Very crudely at the beginning were his researches conducted. The study of the ego was little more than the classification of sensations according to the amount and kind of pleasure or pain they represented and of the means of decreasing the discomfort and increasing the enjoyment. Of the same degree was the attention that primitive man bestowed upon his neighbor. But with the passing of years and the constantly increasing complexity of life and of the mental processes of mankind, the study which has humanity for its object has constantly enlarged its scope. Within it have been created numerous subdivisions and today the study of mankind is the most difficult of the sciences, and the most comprehensive, having both its objective and its subjective phases and including the investigation of all that is related to man, either as an individual or as society.

Of all the branches of this study, that which has been given the name of psychology is the most abstruse—and this because of reasons that may readily be understood. Being, as it is, the science which investigates the phenomena of mind, of the soul or spirit, of the ego, the difficulties which its study involves may be ascribed to two main sources. The first of these is the enormous quantity and at the same time the elusive quality of the material with which the student must contend; the second is the empirical nature of the science itself, based as it is upon hypotheses which, because of the lack of final conclusions in the lower sciences, cannot be accepted as firmly established. The writer upon psychology is, then, confronted by serious difficulties, and at best he can but give the matter which he presents the empirical form, stating what is usually accepted rather than what has been proved. However, the student must be possessed of a knowledge of the work that has been done in this field and it is for this reason that a volume like this "Introduction to Psychology" is of value and should have interested readers.

An examination of the work in question will convince the reader that the book has two conspicuous merits. That which should have first mention is the clearness of the elucidation. While the author has not hesitated to use scientific terminology, he has endeavored to so present the material that he has collected as to direct the attention of the student to the mattar rather than to the form in which it is presented. This is worthy of commendation when it is considered that many, if not most, of the scientific books of the day are couched in language which makes their comprehension by the average student almost an impossibility. The second point that should have praise is the amount of matter which the author has presented. Having proposed to introduce the student to the study of psychology, he makes no attempt to do more than give him the fundamental principles upon which the science is based. It must not be inferred from this statement, however, that the work is incomplete; within the prescribed limits the subject has been thoroughly discussed.

The work has, for the sake of convenience, been divided into two books; the first treating of general psychology, the second of special psychology. Under these headings are numerous subdivisions and chapters and it is, in part, this careful subdividing that enables the author to present so clear and logical a statement of the subject. While it is impossible within the limits of criticism of this work to give a detailed account of the contents of the book, it may be noted that in general the author discusses first the simple elements which compose our mental life, and then considers the processes of that life. The volume is supplied with an index and the table of contents makes reference easy.

Botany.

THE FERN ALLIES OF NORTH AMERICA NORTH OF MEXICO. By Willard Nelson Clute. Frederick A. Stokes, New York.

Our first impulse was to say of this work: "What a charming book." Our second feeling was one of dissatisfaction. The initial emotion was caused by the glance we had upon opening the volume at the really artistic and yet scientifically satisfactory drawings and colored illustrations which are the work of Ida Martin Clute. That which gave birth to a less enthusiastic attitude was the accident of reading when we first became conscious that the work had words, this sentence: "With few exceptions the fern allies are not remarkable for either beauty or utility." This seems to us not only the point of view of a person who has small artistic appreciation but that of one who has little of the spirit which usually animates the man of science. We shall have to believe, after careful examination of the rest of the volume, that the author intended to imply that to the cognoscenti was the beauty of this order of creation revealed—and only to those.

But what are those fern allies? Says the author in his preface: "The fern allies, by reason of their curious forms and often great abundance, seldom fail to attract the attention of the student of plants, but their identification has always proved more or less of a puzzle to beginners. Like the ferns they bear neither flowers nor seeds, and at first glance seem to offer few points by which they may be distinguished. . . . In reality, however, most of the species are easily identified and it is one of the purposes of this book to point out how this may be done." The author then announces his intention of supplying untechnical descriptions of the fern allies for the use of non-professionals and those who are but just beginning the study of the lower orders of the botanical world. It is perhaps for this reason that the author has, in the matter of nomenclature, preferred to employ the names commonly used rather than those whicsh are known only to the authorities.

We find our question concerning the identity of the fern allies answered thus: "Since ferns are members of the vegetable kingdom, all plants are more or less allied to them, but the term 'fern allies,' as commonly understood, has a much more restricted meaning. As regarded by botanists the fern allies are plants belonging to certain families included in one of the great natural groups of the flowerless plants. The fern allies are quite unlike flowering plants in appearance and have little more resemblance to their allies, the ferns; but their structure and manner of fruiting show them to be closely related."

Remembrance of our college days, when we made somewhat of a specialty of the study of botany, causes us to say that in no field of botanical work will the student find more profit and enjoyment than in the study of these non-fruiting plants. The very shyness of many of the family and a sort of elusiveness that makes them difficult to collect adds to the charm of the investigation. And, as we suggested before, in no part of the vegetable world will the man or woman of appreciation find more of beauty or see more clearly illustrated the marvelous adaptation of creature to environment and of organ to use. This field of investigation has another attraction for the investigator; it is comparatively unexploited. Each student may be a discoverer and give to the world new facts.

The author of "The Fern Allies," has followed the plan of giving detailed descriptions of the families and species and then giving keys to the families or species. His work is supplied, also, with indices to the common and the scientific names, with a check list of the fern allies, and with a glossary. The book has some hundred and fifty illustrations, but in our judgment the illustrator has not given enough of the detail of the plants—particularly as the work is intended for the use of beginners in this field of botanical study.

Fairy Tales.

FAIRY TALES EVERY CHILD SHOULD KNOW. Edited by Hamilton Wright Mabie. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

We appreciated that collection entitled "Poems That Every Child Should Know;" we approved of the selections in the main, and we consedered that it was well that the children of America should be given in convenient form verse that otherwise might not have come to them or that they might have been many years gathering from its sources. But—what of this book of selected fairy tales?

When Charles and Mary Lamb saw fit to give to the literary world the "Tales from Shakespeare," the world accepted the volume with pleasure and appreciation. And the reason was not far to seek. These tales had a charm of style and a grace entirely apart from the work of the dramatist. While the stories might be used to introduce the child to the plays themselves, at the same time they gave that child literary food that had a distinct value. But since the days of the Lambs the country has been flooded with selections and collections and anthologies and arrangements and a thousand and one hashed over and indigestible mixtures that not only do not serve as introductions to the originals but that serve rather to create an appetite for the lower rather than the higher forms of literature. The blame for this immense output we place chiefly upon the publishers of text books. In their laudable efforts to supply supplementary reading matter for the schools they have gone to the masters of literature and taken from them what they (the publishers) considered proper for presentation to children. Our comment is upon the treatment of the material thus gleaned. Butchery, drawing and quartering, mutilation of every description, are the only terms that adequately describe the treatment that the selections from the masterpieces of the world have received from the hands of well-meaning but unwise editors and publishers. Judging from the results that are turned out each year, we are forced to place those editors and publishers among those prudish ones who hounded from its place the exquisite Dancing Bacchante and who would prefer the Venus de Milo in the garments of the twentieth century. We would not have it understood that we advocate placing in the hands of children, without selection, the literature of the world. On the contrary, we believe that the mental food of the growing child should be as carefully selected as that which is intended for his body. But we do believe that the literary nourishment which is intended for children should be allowed to retain its original flavor and aroma. Select, if you will, but do not mutilate; give the child—and there are almost no exceptions to this charge—literary masterpieces and classics in their entirety. But, and this is very important, do not attempt to force upon the child that for which he is not ready; do not think that by cutting the classics into small bits and putting them into words of one syllable and serving them thus to the child that you are doing well. Sometimes we are tempted to think that the best method is to turn the child loose in the world of what we call good literature and allow him to select for himself. Certainly this plan has been productive of excellent results in the case of many who have achieved name and fame.

But in discoursing on a subject which is very near to our heart we have wandered far from the book of fairy tales that was our text. With the collection of stories given we find no fault. With the fact that credit has not been given to the authors of the tales we do find cause for censure; the child should know who wrote the stories when the author is known and he should know where the collection from which the selection is made can be found. We are also inclined to complain of the paucity of illustrations—only one "really truly" picture in the whole book! However—if a child can have only one book of fairy stories, this collection will present to him a representative mass of this class of literature. But why not give the child his Anderson and his Grimm and his Laboulaye? And why not give it to him in the old form with the old illustrations that have become as classic as the tales themselves? We leave the question with the reader and we make, at the same time, our apologies to Mr. Hamilton Wright Mabie and to Blanche Osterteg, neither of whom, we judge, was brought up upon the watered milk of literature.

POETRY.

Keats.

THE POEMS OF JOHN KEATS. Edited, with introduction and notes, by E. de Selincourt. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

The aim of this new edition of the poems of John Keats is to reproduce, except for obvious errors, the exact text of the three volumes published during the poet's lifetime and to give in the most approved form the rest of his verse. That an edition of this kind should be necessary after the work which appeared under the editorship of Mr. Forman, seems at first thought not to be. But examination of the book before us will convince the lover of Keats that this present volume is one that he could not long have done without. If for no other reason the reader will be convinced of this fact when he finds that as the present volume was going to press two important Mss. came to light—the autograph Ms. of Hyperion and the Woodhouse transcript of The Fall of Hyperion and other poems. Of these finds the editor says: "The first has preserved for us many earlier readings of Hyperion of intense interest in a study of Keat's art, the second enables us to correct the printed text of The Fall of Hyperion in several important places, while among the minor poems at the end of the Ms. are two which have not been published before." Of the four additions found in the Woodhouse transcript the first is the best and runs thus:

Fill for me a brimming bowl
And let me in it drown my soul;
But put therein some drug designed
To banish Women from my mind:
For I want not the stream inspiring
That fills the mind with—fond desiring,
But I want as deep a draught
As are from Lethe's wave was quaff'd;
From my despairing heart to charm
The Image of the fairest form
That e'er my reveling eyes beheld
That e'er my wandering fancy spell'd.
In vain! away I cannot chace
The melting softness of that face
The beaminess of those bright eyes
That breast—earth's only Paradise.
My sight will never more be blessed;
For all I see has lost its zest;
Nor with delight can I explore
The Classic page or Muse's lore.
Had she but known how beat my heart,
And with one smile reliev'd its smart
I should have felt a sweet relief
I should have felt "the joy of grief,"
Yet as the Tuscan mid the snow
Of Lapland thinks on Sweet Arno,
Even so for ever shall she be
The Halo of my Memory.

The date of this poem is given as 1814, August, and it needs not the date to show the hand of the immature youth.

The other verses found in the transcript are the sonnet on "Peace," a song beginning:

Stay, ruby-breasted Warbler, stay,
And let me see thy sparkling eye:

and the lines "To Emma."

Of the arrangement used Mr. Sélincourt has this to say: "A word must be said in explanation, and if need be in defense, of the arrangement of the posthumous and fugitive poems. It is a practice widely followed by modern scholarship to collect under this head every scrap of verse that can be discovered, and to produce the whole under the title of 'Poems,' and there is much to be said for the arrangement. On the other hand I cannot help agreeing with Mr. Colvin that to print snatches of doggerel and nonsense verses, such as are to be found in the Letters of Keats, 'gravely, among the poetical works, is to publish the levities of genius too hard,' and I am convinced that when the Ode to Maia shares a page with Dawlish Fair, and La Belle Dame sans Merci is immediately preceded by Two or Three Posies, as the dates of composition demand, the mind is not attuned to their proper appreciation, and chronological accuracy is bought at a heavy price."

It is for the reason set forth above then that the reader will find that those verses which are obviously the products of the poet's lightest and most playful moments or of his times of barrenness are collected in an appendix. The arrangement of the other poems is made, as far as possible, on the principles which actuated the poet in the volumes of 1817 and 1820. "The Fall of Hyperion is placed first, for pure convenience, that it may stand next to Hyperion; it is followed by the other narrative poems, then by the Odes, by the Songs and Lyrics, by the Epistle to Reynolds, then by the Sonnets and the Dramas." The Appendix is arranged strictly according to the time of production. In the opinion of the editor it contains much verse which could well be spared and which is only added to satisfy those readers who like to possess not merely what their author wished to be preserved, but that which he would willingly have let die. And yet we doubt if the reader will agree with Mr. Sélincourt that the Sonnet to a Cat should be permitted to vanish:

Cat! who hast pass'd thy grand climacteric,
How many rats and mice hast in thy days
Destroyed? — How many tit-bits stolen? Gaze
With those bright languid segments green, and prick
Those velvet ears—but pr'ythee do not stick
Thy latent talons in me—and upraise
Thy gentle mew—and tell me all thy frays
Of fish and mice, and rats and tender chick.
Nay, look not down, nor lick thy dainty wrists—
For all the wheezy asthma,—and for all
Thy tail's tip is nick'd off—and though the fists
Of many a maid have given thee many a maul,
Still is that fur as soft as when the lists
In youth thou enter'dst on glass bottled wall.

Or who would be the happier for knowing that this had once been and then been lost?

Oh, I am frighten'd with most hateful thought!
Perhaps her voice is not a nightingale's,
Perhaps her teeth are not the fairest pearl;
Her eye-lashes may be, for aught I know,
Not longer than the May-fly's small fan-horns;
There may not be one dimple on her hand;
And freckles many; ah! a careless nurse,
In haste to teach the little thing to walk,
May have crumpt up a pair of Dian's legs,
And wrapt the ivory of a Juno's neck.

It will be found that the notes, which are both textual and illustrative, have been given place after the poems rather than at the bottom of the pages as might have seemed more convenient. The explanation of this arrangement may be found in the spirit which prompted Keats himself to say with a package of poems that he sent to his brother in America: "Here are the poems. They will explain themselves—as all poetry should do without any comment." The reader will not be sorry that the editor has not followed too literally the opinion of the poet. The notes are extensive and carefully made and will be of great help in the critical reading of the poems and will add to the pleasure of the reader.

Of the Appendices, that marked B contains a chronological table of the life of Keats and a note on date of Hunt's First Acquaintance with Keats. Appendix C deals with the sources of Keat's poetic vocabulary, and is a valuable addition to the work. The volume contains also a glossary, an index of first lines and a general index.

We believe that lovers of the poet cannot find in more convenient form so large an amount of information concerning the poet and his work, nor any collection of the poems which will be more satisfactory.

RELIGION.

Of Japan.

CHRISTIANITY IN MODERN JAPAN. By Ernest W. Clement. American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia.

This work contains, apparently, a fair and comprehensive statement of the work of the Christian missionaries in Japan and of the results which they have accomplished. "The object of this book," says the author, "is to give a birdseye view of the work of Christianity in Japan. It is not intended to cover that subject in great detail; it is rather planned to be a general outline with reference to books, pamphlets and magazines, where more complete information can be obtained on each special topic." While the author has carried out this plan, and thus made a work which will be of great help to those who are making an exhaustive study of the subject, he has given in the text sufficient information for those who desire an intelligent but not necessarily minute idea of the progress and condition of the work of the Christian churches in this land of the Orient.

From the book the reader may learn of the periods which have marked the progress of the work. The first period, that extending over the years from 1863 to 1859, during which the only evidences of Christianity in Japan were the edicts which were issued against it, is the subject of the first chapter. The author translates one of these edicts which found place upon the bulletin boards of the empire. It read: "So long as the sun shall warm the earth, let no Christian be so bold as to come to Japan, and let all know that the King of Spain himself or the Christians' God or the great God of all, if he violate this command, shall pay for it with his head." The second period may be called that of preparation. Its extent was from 1859 to 1873, and it was the time during which Japan was making treaties with the rest of the world, and opening her doors to foreign commerce. With the traders came the missionaries, but only a few places were open to them and the doctrines of Christianity spread slowly. The years 1883-1889 saw a surprising activity in the mission field. It was during this time that a pro-foreign sentiment prevailed, which led not only to the wholesale adoption of foreign manners and customs, the introduction of the English language into the curricula of the schools, but even to the advocacy of the acceptance of Christianity merely as a matter of good policy, because by such a course Japan would more easily win her much-desired position of equality with the great nations of Christendom. It was in 1884 that the government of Japan removed obstacles to the progress of Christianity and in 1889 came the introduction of local self-government and the promulgation of the new constitution which gave to the Japanese political and social privileges which had not before been theirs, and freedom of religious belief. It was but natural that a time of reaction should follow this extraordinary activity, and such we find was the case, but this time was brought to a close in 1899 when there began a revival of interest which is still spreading and developing.

The author having treated these periods which have been briefly outlined, next takes up the work of the individual churches. As is fair, the Roman Catholic record is briefly outlined first. Fair this is, because it was the great Jesuit missionary, Francis Xavier, who, in 1549, carried to Japan the message of Christianity. So zealous and successful was he that at the beginning of the seventeenth century there were in the country about a million converts. The work of the Greek Catholics, of whom Nicolai Kasatkin is the leader, is the subject of a chapter. Both of the branches of the Catholic church have done and are doing praiseworthy things in the land, and their converts are many. The mission efforts of the Protestants, of the Baptists, the Methodists, the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists and of other sects are discussed, and there is a chapter on interdenominational organizations that is of interest. Special fields of work are considered and the progress of philanthropic and sociological movements. "Religious Liberty in Japan" is a chapter heading which suggests interesting reading. The book has an appendix wherein is made a comparison of the condition of the faith in 1853 and 1903, and also of the state of the nation in general at the beginning of the half century and at its end. The report certainly shows a rapid advance along the lines which may have been influenced by the introduction of the doctrines of Christianity. A second appendix gives the statistics of the Christian missions in 1903 and the book ends with a full index.

NURSING.

In the Sick Room.

HINTS AND HELPS IN NURSING. By J. Quintin Griffith. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia.

Threefold is the object of this volume. It aims to supply three needs—the need of a guide in times of sickness, the need of a guide in the care of infants and children, and the need of a guide for the preservation of the health. "It is not intended to teach the practice of medicine. The administration of medicine is such a serious business that it should be undertaken only by those duly qualified by a long course of study." Thus speaks the author, and wisely has he spoken. The habit that is growing among us of prescribing for oneself and for one's friends cannot be too seriously deprecated. True it is that to teach a person only a little about prescribing medicine is about as wise as putting a sharp-edged tool in the hands of an infant.

Yet the public must have a certain knowledge of the common ills that befall mankind, and of the means that should be taken to mitigate those ills. In this work he will find much information of a valuable nature, put into such form that it is available for the layman.

After a preliminary chapter devoted to the nurse and her preparation for the care of her patient, the author proceeds with the main body of the work. He has, for convenience, divided the contents into seven parts, and these parts have such headings as The Patient, Diseases, Surgery and Emergencies, Obstetrics, The Care of Infants and Children, Gynecology and The Dying and Dead.

Part 1 contains instructions regarding such topics as the sick room and gives advice upon its selection and preparation. Antiseptics and disinfectants are discussed and the important subjects of douches of various kinds, and of medicines and prescriptions are not neglected. The section given to diseases treats of those which are chronic and those which are acute, of contagious and infectious diseases, of zymotic and venereal diseases and of the diseases which are common to the special organs. Surgery and emergencies include wounds of various kinds, ulcers and such afflictions and this part gives directions for the care and bandaging that are necessary. The sections that discuss obstetrics and gynecology might be read with profit by most women, and the instructions for the care of infants and children are practical and comprehensive. The book closes with a very short chapter devoted to the care that should be given a patient who is dying, and to the care of the body after death. There are also instructions concerning the means of ascertaining beyond a doubt that death has actually taken place.

If we have any adverse criticism of the book it is that there are not enough illustrations. Those that are given are useful, but there should have been more, for the average person is able to learn much more easily by means of pictures than by the medium of words. Except for this lack the work is practical and it or one of the same nature should be in the hands of every family.

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

Mrs. Sarah Platt Carr, whose beautiful story, "The Sacrifice," was published in The Times Magazine last Sunday, is engaged in writing a book to be published in the not distant future. As Mrs. Carr is widely known as a member of a noted family, and as a woman of much literary talent, her forthcoming book will be awaited with much interest by hosts of admirers.

The Williamsons' motor romance, "The Princess Passes," is increasing in popularity as the months go by. Henry Holt & Co. are just printing the eighth large edition of this book, which, in its first seven months, has sold more than five times as many as the same author's "Lightning Conductor" did in its first season.

His Grace the Duke of Argyll (brother-in-law of Edward VII,) contributes to the November number of The Smart Set a long poem entitled "The Three Little Africanders," which is delightfully humorous.

McClure-Phillips are printing a third edition of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's "My Friend the Chauffeur," a second edition of Elizabeth Cherry Waltz's "The Ancient Landmark," a second edition of Eugene Woods's "Back Home," a second edition of Frances Browne's "Granny's Wonderful Chair," a fifth edition of Myra Kelly's "Little Citizens," a fourth edition of Kate Douglas Wiggin's and Nora Archibald Smith's "The Posy Ring," a third edition of "Youth," and a third edition of Booth Tarkington's "The Beautiful Lady."

The richly decorated Autumn Number of The Youth's Companion leads off with an autumnal story by C. A. Stephens, bearing the odd title, "Beechnuts and a Battering-Ram." There's a good Yale-Harvard football story, "The Girl at the Five-Yard Line," by Edwin Balmer. Fisher Ames, Jr., contributes an idyl of wild bird-life, "The Leader of the Flock." The third chapter of Holman F. Day's story of "The Rainy-Day Railroad War" comes in this issue of the paper, and fills the reader with a desire to get hold of the numbers to come. Two more stories, one of an ice-cutter's hair-breadth escape from death under the ice, the other of experiences with a mountain lion, fill up the pages devoted to fiction.

The poet, Cale Young Rice, author of "Charles di Tocca" and "David," dramatic poems, has just taken up with a venture that is quite at variance with poetic traditions. He is to hold an important executive position in a bank which he has been instrumental in forming in Louisville, Ky.

Booth Tarkington's "The Beautiful Lady" has made an immediate success in England. It has already gone into a third edition there.

Moffat, Yard & Co. announce the publication of John P. Benson's amusing drawings and verses known far and wide as "The Woozlebeasts." The book contains sixty-three drawings in black on a tint plate, the verses on the opposite pages. Mr. Benson's astonishing animals possess a fascination to old and young which is indescribable.

Little, Brown & Co. announce a new illustrated edition of "Ramona," with a series of full-page plates and numerous interesting and suggestive chapter headings, all from drawings by the noted artist, Henry Sandham, who some years since accompanied Mrs. Jackson to California, and was with her when she planned "Ramona." His original sketches were drawn upon the scene of the story, and embody suggestions made by the author.

The Century Company will issue Farmer's "Versailles and the Court Under Louis XIV" this fall. The volume will be a royal octavo, bound in light blue cloth, with seventy-two full-page illustrations in tint, reproductions from photographs and of famous pictures. Mr. Farmer, who is Master in History and English Literature at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., has been a zealous student of French history.

What causes Yellow Fever, how it is prevented and how New Orleans has so successfully managed to keep it within control during the present epidemic is described in "The Trained Nurse and Hospital Review" for October by Rudolph Matas, M.D. the celebrated New Orleans physician who has done so much to check the spread of yellow fever in that city. A valuable adjunct to this article is another by Millard Langfeld, M. D., Professor of Bacteriology at Creighton Medical College and Bacteriologist to the Omaha City Board of Health, entitled "The Role of Insects in the Transmission of Disease."

Prof. Richard Burton, formerly of the University of Minnesota, who read the manuscript of "The Ballingtons," by Frances Squire, says: "It is a powerful study of modern social relations, a picture of married life that sets one thinking, while the story is of enthralling interest. The author is a member of the faculty of the University of Minnesota. Little, Brown & Co., Boston, the publishers of "The Ballingtons," announce that the advance sale has been large for the first novel by a new author.

Senator Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana has written a book entitled "The Young Man and the World." D. Appleton & Co. have just published it. The book is a book for young men.

The publication of "He and Hecuba," by Baroness von Hutten, the author of "Pam," was postponed twice by D. Appleton & Company on account of the large number of advance orders which were even greater than the publishers anticipated. Before the first publication day came they had sold the contemplated first edition twice over, and on the occasion of the second postponement they were still several hundred copies short of the number necessary to fill the bookdealers' orders.

"The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" by Anne Warner, which Little, Brown & Co. published on October 2, has already gone into a third edition. The author in her latest book has written a story excelling in interest both "Susan Clegg and Her Friend Mrs. Lathrop," and "A Woman's Will," according to the critics.

The Macmillan Company announce for publication almost immediately a number of the most popular plays by Mr. Clyde Fitch. "The Girl with the Green Eyes," "The Climbers," "The Toast of the Town," "Her Own Way" and "The Stubbornness of Geraldine" will be published this month or next in separate volumes. It is hoped to follow these later with other plays by Mr. Fitch.

The University of Chicago Press announces a new book from the pen of President William R. Harper entitled "The Prophetic Element in the Old Testament." This is the latest volume in the series of Constructive Bible Studies, edited by Dr. Harper in conjunction with Ernest D. Burton. The book is adapted to advanced Bible classes and to college and divinity students, and assumes that the reader has already an understanding of scholarly methods, and a ripe judgment.

THE MAGAZINES.

The November Ainslee's contains some very striking short stories. "In the Garage," by Robert E. MacAlarney, is an automobile story distinctly novel in both theme and treatment. "The Journalist," by Joseph Blethen, deals with the noble red man as he is today, and is also very original. In "The Second Best," Eleanor A. Hallowell handles a difficult subject very adroitly. Joseph C. Lincoln, who is doing for the Cape Cod folk what W. W. Jacobs is doing for the English peasantry, has a delightful story entitled "His Native Heath." There are half a dozen other short stories, a fascinating complete novel, two brilliant essays, and some excellent poetry in this splendid number.

It is nearly twenty years since the Century published its life of Lincoln by Nicolay and Hay, and now it is to take up Lincoln's career as a series of papers prepared Trevor Hill, a member of the bar, with the assistance of T. Lincoln and a number of have been able to contribute terial.

THE VICTIM AT THE DOOR.

The door swings on its hinges without a sound. There is no clanking of chains or sound of the turning of locks or moving of bars after the manner of the prison scene we find in stageland. The well-oiled hinges turn without a creak. The great iron door swings back and in its archway stands the group, the central figure pale, dazed, the personification of utter despair and utter loneliness. It will be a blessing when he is dead. The torture of the mind, the dread of what is to come still in life, the wonder, the fear of what will come after death, the dread of the physical pain, the mental agony, the despair, the anguish of soul, the hysterical raving, all have had their turn and now before us we find the awful result, the shattered emaciated remnants of a man, living yet dead, benumbed, dazed, hopeless, terrible rankling despair stamped and graven on every line of his countenance.

He faces the chair. His eye is fixed upon it. For a second only his sense of feeling returns to him. It is the final shock, far more terrible than the electric current that soon will end his misery. Every eye is bent upon him. We look at him as a strange creature, a separate species, an animal with which we are unfamiliar, but which is there for inspection. Every head is bent forward. Not a word is spoken. Not a sound is heard except the steady chant, chant of the minister. And no one seems to hear what he is saying. Even the man he is praying for pays no heed to him. His mind is in the world to come.

DAZED AT THE SCENE.

The keepers prop the fellow up. They stand each side of him. They are prepared for the halt at the door. They all do that. But they do not let the pause be lengthy. Firmly they urge the victim on. They are ready, too, for resistance. Why does not this man turn like a caged beast and try to rend the whole company of us limb from limb; why does he not fight, why does he not battle for his God-given life; why does he not rush with frenzy on his captors, fighting and struggling as a man driven mad, at least until sheer exhaustion stays him? We wonder why. Later we know that that stage of frenzy has been passed long ago; has he not been watched by careful keepers to see he should not injure himself in his cell. Did he not try to dash his brains out, crashing his skull madly against the bars of his cell? Was he not badly hurt in another attempt to cheat the chair, and was he not nursed back to life in the prison hospital, tended and strengthened so that he might be in good condition to die on the fixed day the law set for his burial. No, he is past struggling now. He can show only a faint reluctance to sit in that great strong fatal chair.

Onward they move him. The keepers hold his arms in grips of steel. Steadily, forcefully, irresistibly, they move him toward the chair. He shuffles slowly to his final resting place with the humdrum monotone of the parson's chant ringing in his ears.

THE MAN IN THE CHAIR.

Hitherto he has been treated considerately, indeed almost gently, but once before the chair all this is changed. He is forced down into the seat before he has time to realize what is being done. The electrician arouses himself; like a flash of lightning he becomes alert, his hand goes to the lever, his piercing eyes gleam through the space with a look of expectancy in them. The guards grab the victim simultaneously. Not a second is wasted. They know their business, and have been well trained. One man grabs each arm, jams it down on to the arm of the chair and straps it hard and tight. A third fastens the straps to the legs and fixes the electrode. At the same time the ghastly looking death mask is fixed on the head, the dampened sponge inside completing the electric circuit that is to kill.

It is quick work, even if it is rough. Back the guards step, while every witness half rises from his seat, bending forward in an eagerness that shows how powerful is the spirit of the curious within us all. The staid warden who has accompanied the man to the chair raises his hand and then comes the crisis—the lever is shot and the process of the legal killing is on.

THE KILLING COMPLETED.

There is not much to see. Those who would witness a killing by electricity from morbid curiosity surely would be disappointed. A deep whirring sound reminds you of the humming of a giant top. The face of the victim is hidden nearly completely by the headgear attached to the chair, so that the muscular writhing is kept from the view to a large extent. Only the mouth can be seen clearly, but the distortion is enough to make you feel glad the whole face is not exposed. As the current shoots into the body the torso straightens out with a bound, and swells until you think the heavy straps are about to burst. The strain upon them is intense. The fearful voltage shot with lightning rapidity into the body, and circulating through every vein makes the carcass quiver and vibrate so quickly that the movement is scarcely visible. The current is then lowered, and the tension is taken off the body, but again the body stretches and bounds, pressing hard against the straps. Finally, the lever is swung back again, and what was once a man falls limp and lifeless, huddled in a heap in the bottom of the avenging chair.

RUSH OF THE DOCTORS.

It is this suddenness of death that impresses: this realization that a moment before there stood before you a breathing human being, while now before you lies a helpless corpse. Frigenbaum had been forced to solve the great secret.

There is a rush from the seats by the doctors. One or two of them must see if there is yet a sign of life in the body. How gingerly they approach the radius of the chair, how fearful they are lest by some mistake they should receive a shock. A few seconds ago they saw a man killed; they watched it with the greatest interest; they sat unmoved, save by a feeling of intense curiosity; but now their senses are revived by the thought of possible personal danger. No sign of life. We turn around. One of the newspaper men has fainted. There is a movement to his side. Here is one knot of men trying to revive a man to consciousness, there another group trusting they will not be able to find a sign of life in the body they are examining.

No time is wasted now. The straps are unbuckled, and in an instant the body of the murderer is lying on the dissecting table, for it is necessary to find out the cause of death, and to have it duly recorded. The coarse shirt is torn open at the front and the breast exposed. Every doctor's bag is opened now, and the gleam of instruments is seen on every hand.

CARVING THE BODY.

The operating surgeon takes a long stilletto-like instrument and forces it through the breast until the heart is pierced. A little darkened blood oozes from the tiny wound, and this is examined with all due care and interest. A few remarks are passed and the autopsy goes on apace. The top of the skull is sawed off, the shattered brain removed. The lungs are exposed, for there may be a chance that this man died from a tubercular hemorrhage. All of the usual details of such examinations are gone through with rapidity until inside of ten minutes the scene resembles a prosperous butcher shop. Then the remains are bound together, the skull is stuffed with cotton and tied to the remainder of the head. The whole is made as neat as it can be, and then it is ready to be turned over to the relatives if there be any. For Frigenbaum there remained but quicklime. He had no friends—he was alone—and aged too—a stranger in a strange land. The men of learning leaned over the body and discussed various theories of science, of life and death—the problem he had solved. Which was the wisest now?

THE WEDDING BREAKFAST.

But the doctors must "wash up." Inside of five minutes all the débris was cleared away, the dissecting table had been washed and dried, and the doctors and other witnesses, looking spick and span, were ready to enter the warden's room to enjoy "the wedding breakfast." The strain is over. Champagne corks popped, coffee, delicious sandwiches and all things incident to first-class buffet luncheon were on hand. Soon the jokes began to fly around, while here and there someone would discuss the manner in which the victim met his death, the justice of it, or moralize on the foolishness of defying the law. All were extremely pleased to have met the warden, they hoped to see him again soon, not one but wanted to renew the pleasure of his acquaintance.

AS TO DOGS AND MEN.

"I suppose I shall see you at the next one." "Oh, certainly, drop me a line." "When is the next affair? Delighted to have met you—no thanks, do not bother, we will walk to the station; it is close at hand, besides it is such a lovely morning." Then turning to a friend: "By Jove, I hope we catch that train; my dog arrived at 7 this morning from Asheville, and he is crated; poor devil will be in an awful state if I don't get him out of there soon." "Yes, you'd better hurry. It's a confounded shame they force you to fasten up dogs in this manner. It's downright cruelty, you know." Then the train puffs into the station—Sing Sing. Here and there a head pops out to see if a glance may be had at the prison—a little mild curiosity. We board the car and away we go, bound for Forty-second street, New York. "Say, do you see that man in the third seat with the large cigar in his mouth?" "Yes." "That's the fellow who wrecked the East Side bank and engineered the great Wall street swindle two years ago." "I thought he was in jail." "Oh, no. He was to have been tried, but the matter was hushed up somehow. Burns can tell you all about it—the fellow who fainted when Davies sprung the lever."

Nor for Moral Stimulant.

A French writer says that the Japanese have profited only by the material progress of Europe, not by its moral elevation. They show their lack of moral beauty, it seems, by their failure to appreciate Pierre Loti. A Japanese critic is very severe on the author of "Madame Chrysantheme." "To describe such a man, incarnate demon is the only expression that is true, exact, fitting and scientific. He has the gross nature of Caliban, and the deformed, decrepit, diseased, impotent intellect of Mephistopheles. If I were asked to name the book which exhibits European civilization in its most degraded form, I should not hesitate to say 'Madame Chrysantheme.' There could not be a sadder sign of the moral baseness in the educated classes of Europe than the popularity of this romance." This is rather steep; but it must be admitted that we do not go to Pierre Loti for moral stimulant.—[London Chronicle.

STAMPS WE LICK.

COATING THEM WITH GUM A VERY INTERESTING PROCESS.

BY W. W. PRICE.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—When you lick a postage stamp you do not give the slightest thought to the great care taken by the United States bureau of engraving and printing in the gumming of the little piece of paper, so long as the letter goes to its destination without trouble you haven't anything to say and it matters little to you how the gum is put on.

But the process is, all the same, a most interesting and delicate one, requiring precaution in securing a uniform coating of the best adhesive gum to be had. The process is as much an exact science as the building of the great naval guns at the Washington or Brooklyn navy yards.

So exacting is the postoffice department in requiring a uniform coating that after the gumming is over the stamps are tested to discover if the coating of the mucilage varied seven ten-thousandths of a pound to a sheet, which measures 18½ by 23 inches, each containing 400 stamps. The sheets go to the gumming room after printing and the gumming concludes one of the principal processes necessary before delivery to the Postoffice Department.

There are eight gumming machines in the light, airy room where the adhesive was applied during the last fiscal year to 5,830,363,275 perfect stamps. Each machine is "fed" by a lady operative, who passes the sheets on to an endless chain-belt, which carries them under a glass gumming roller, automatically coated with just the proper proportion of mucilage. The chain belt goes right on with the freshly-gummed stamps to a covered drying box fifty feet long, containing coils of steam pipe, which produce a temperature of 130 deg. Fahr. There is a slow journey of one minute through this drying box and stamps came out with the mucilage perfectly dry. The machine automatically delivers them to a female operative of an expert class. She moves her educated hands over the sheets and determines whether they are passing through the drying box at just the right speed to insure proper drying. If the process is not going along satisfactorily the woman touches an electric button and gives a signal to the woman feeding the sheets at the other end to increase or diminish the speed of the chain belt. There are other signals belonging to a prearranged code that she may give. These are highly essential, because the state of the weather has much to do with the operation of the machines, which are run at varying degrees of speed to suit. The drying box will not dry the stamps as rapidly in damp weather as in dry, and there is a vast difference in the time for going through. A thorough inspection follows the gumming to see if there are any defects and the sheets are rolled to take out the curl of the paper. Counting and pressing is the next step before going to the perforating room.

KEEP TRACK OF THE GUM.

There are a dozen things done each day to keep track of the perfect gumming of the stamps. When the machine pressmen report for duty each morning they are furnished blank forms that must be filled out at the close of each day. The blank requires an accurate account of every ounce given to each pressman and every sheet of stamps gummed on each machine. The workman must state on his blank just how many ounces of gum was distributed on each one thousand sheets of stamps during the day. The gum is kept in a small tank containing fifty-two pounds of the liquid, and this is exactly enough to coat 2000 sheets. The tank is equipped with a graduated scale which indicates at any moment just how much gum has been used. All this helps to get the precise proportion of gum, and is an absolute check on the amount of gum used, the number of sheets handled, etc.

It took careful experiment and exact scientific calculation to determine the proportion of gum and paper. There was science in the matter of the temperature at which the gum should be spread upon the paper. This is 80 degrees and the specific gravity must be 29. A special employé is detailed to look after these features. The varying degrees of humidity in the atmosphere in different parts of the country present many difficulties in the gumming room and experts are needed to settle these troubles. Experiments have shown that the Mississippi Valley, south of St. Louis to New Orleans, is the most trying part of the United States to gum stamps for, owing to the excessive humidity prevailing at all times of the year, causing the sheets to stick together when sent to postmasters and held for the public. Stamp experts of the bureau say that stamps that will meet the requirements of New Orleans will be suitable for any other part of the country.

Besides the necessity to look after different sections of the country, the atmospheric condition of the gumming room itself must be looked after closely, experiments having shown that the temperature of the room must be kept 80 deg. Fahr. and 55 per cent. of humidity. The temperature and humidity are taken each hour and the results are recorded on a blackboard. To meet the changing seasons the quality of the gum is changed four times each year. There is the winter, or soft gum, used during November, December, January, February and March; the summer, or hard gum, used in June, July, August and September, the spring and fall gums, used in April May and October. The summer gum is made hard to resist the humidity and to prevent sticking together of sheets in the postoffices of the country. The winter gum is to enable resistance to frosty, cold weather, which causes curling and cracking.

WHAT POSTAL GUM IS.

When you lick a postage stamp you need not fear that the gum is something unclean. Postal gum is the best quality on the face of the earth. It is derived from dextrine, a product secured in the process of making starch from potatoes, corn and the cassava root. The starch from these vegetables is treated by roasting at a temperature of about 300 deg. at the first stage, causing it to turn into dextrine. Further changes make postal gum, and if the changes were carried to the limit the result would be grape sugar or glucose. The best postal gum is that which contains the least unconverted starch and little glucose. When the material for making gum reaches the bureau of engraving and printing it looks much like flour except in color. It comes in sacks of 200 pounds each, and every consignment from the contractors is carefully inspected before using. It is subjected to microscopical examination and to chemical analysis, and all this is followed by a practical test.

The qualities the government demands in the gum are adhesiveness, lustre, absence of grit, flexibility, resistance to humidity and color. About 300,000 pounds of the flour are used each year in the gumming of stamps, the daily consumption being about 850 pounds. The average cost is around 6 cents per pound.

The flour is turned into liquid gum way down in the basement of the bureau. There are three steam jacketed kettles, of a capacity of 100 gallons each. A formula is followed in mixing the flour and water and care is taken in the cooking. From the kettles the gum is pumped to a settling tank, where it is strained and reduced to the proper specific gravity. Another pump takes it to the gumming room, where it is again strained in a large tank above the floor, being conveyed later to the gumming machines.

Experiments are constantly going on in the gumming room as to finding a substitute for the steam coils in the drying box, the object being to keep right up with anything that is late. Less steam heat is considered desirable.

Over 17,000,000 stamps are used in the United States each day in the year, and the gumming machines must keep pace with that consumption. Without the number of machines having been increased in the last five years the output has increased on an average of 2,000,000 stamps a day. In four years the people of the United States have increased their use of stamps that much. The machines have a capacity, if forced, of 19,000,000 stamps each day. This is 61,000 sheets. Both internal revenue and postage stamps are gummed on the same machines, the gumming process varying little.

A TALK ABOUT DIAMONDS.

METEORIC ORIGIN OF THE GEMS FOUND IN ARIZONA.

Sir William Crookes Explains to an Interested Assembly at the Diamond City the Probable Origin of Natural Diamonds and the Process of Artificial Manufacture of Them.

[Washington Post:] Sir William Crookes, the noted English scientist, in the course of a fascinating talk on diamonds at Kimberley, South Africa (the Diamond City,) a few days ago, explained to the audience how the precious gems might be manufactured in imitation of the stones which nature has so lavishly strewn over South Africa.

Even without the experiments and illustrations which the hearers of the lecture enjoyed, the interest of readers in this country will be arrested by Sir William's account of the titanic convulsions and the enormous pressures at vast depths in the earth which have been at work to convert the carbon into sparkling gems, or by his descriptions of the diamonds which were rained from heaven in meteorites in Arizona.

People at Kimberley paid, it seems, as much as $25 for a seat to hear Sir William Crookes. Were they diamond merchants or De Beers shareholders, all unconscious of their impending doom? For the lecturer produced for their inspection diamonds of his own manufacture, proved that there was no deception, and explained that there are at least two different processes for making in the laboratory diamonds which for luster, crystalline form, optical properties, density, and hardness are identical with the natural stones extracted from the mines of Kimberley. But at the end Kimberley must have breathed again, for in one respect Sir William Crookes had to confess that the largest artificial diamond yet produced is less than one-twenty-fifth of an inch across. Could you see it in a lady's tiara. Barely.

LARGEST DIAMONDS HIDDEN.

After a description of the diamond mines at Kimberley, Sir William Crookes discussed the origin of the pipes in which the diamonds are found. These pipes, he said, were caused by the action of water vaporized by molten iron, hydrogen, and other gases being evolved, which scored the vents in the ground carrying the diamondiferous matter. Incidentally, he mentioned that the Cullinan diamond, weighing 3,025 3-4 carats (1.371 pounds,) found in the Premier mine, near Pretoria, was a fragment, probably less than half, of a distorted octahedral crystal; the other portions still await discovery by some fortunate miner.

On the question of the origin of the diamond, Sir William had the most interesting information to impart.

"The first necessity," he said, "is to select pure iron, free from sulphur, silicon, phosphorus, etc., and to pack it in a carbon crucible with pure charcoal from sugar." The crucible must then be put into the body of the electric furnace. "After a few minutes' heating to a temparature above 4000 degrees C., a temperature at which the iron melts like wax and volatilizes in clouds, the current is stopped and the dazzling, fiery crucible is plunged beneath the surface of cold water, where it is held until it sinks below a red heat.

"The sudden cooling solidifies the outer layer of iron and holds the inner molten mass in a tight grip. The expension of the inner liquid on solidifying produces an enormous pressure, and under the stress of this pressure the dissolved carbon separates out in transparent forms—minutely microscopic, it is true—all the same veritable diamonds, with crystalline form and appearance, color, hardness and action on light the same as the natural gem."

STREWN BY METEORS.

Another diamond theory appeals to the fancy. It is said the diamond is a gift from heaven, conveyed to earth in meteoric showers.

According to this hypothesis, the so-called volcanic pipes are simply holes bored in the solid earth by the impact of monstrous meteors—the larger masses boring the holes, while the smaller masses, disintegrating in their fall, distributed diamonds broadcast.

The most striking confirmation of the meteoric theory comes from Arizona. Here, on a broad, open plain, over an area about five miles in diameter, have been scattered one or two thousand masses of metallic iron, the fragments varying in weight from half a ton to a fraction of an ounce. There is little doubt these masses formed part of a meteoric shower, although no record exists as to when the fall took place. Curiously enough, near the center, where most of the meteorites have been found, is a crater with raised edges three-quarters of a mile in diameter and about 600 feet deep, bearing exactly the appearance which would be produced had a mighty mass of iron struck the ground and buried itself under the surface.

"Bizarre as such a theory is," observed the great scientist, "I am bound to say there are many circumstances which show that the notion of the heavens raining diamonds is not impossible." In proof of this he showed the audience photographs of diamonds he had extracted from a meteorite.

It is certain from observations I have made, corroborated by experience gained in the laboratory, that iron at a high temperature and under great pressure—conditions existent at great depths below the surface of the earth—acts as the long-sought solvent for carbon, and will allow it to crystallize out in the form of diamond. But it is also certain, from the evidence afforded by the Arizona and other meteorites, that similar conditions have existed among bodies in space, and that on more than one occasion a meteorite freighted with jewels has fallen as a star from the sky.

SIMILARITY OF ORIGIN.

Many circumstances point to the conclusion that the diamond of the chemist and the diamond of the mine are strangely akin as to origin. It is not difficult to imagine that masses of iron saturated with carbon existed formerly at a sufficient depth below the present mines, where temperature and pressure would produce the reactions which laboratory experiments show to be probable.

The lecture abounded in interesting passages. Here is one:

"It is not uncommon for a diamond to explode soon after it reaches the surface; some have been known to burst in the pockets of miners or when held in the warm hand, and the loss is the greater because large stones are more liable to explode or fly in pieces than small ones. By way of safeguard against explosion, some dealers imbed large diamonds in raw potato to insure safe transit to England."

By the end of 1904 ten tons of diamonds valued at $300,000,000, had come from the Kimberley mines. This mass of gems could be accommodated in a box five feet square and six feet high.

According to the lecturer, one of the most remarkable gems in existence is a phosphorescing diamond in the possession of Mrs. Kunz of New York, which will phosphoresce in the dark for some minutes after being exposed to a small pocket electric light, and if rubbed on a piece of cloth leaves a long streak of phosphorescence.

De Christian folks, dey's got it right,

They Bellevue Hospital sometimes, shamming sick have become there an insufferable nuisance, newly-arrived patients with solicitations of commence suit. The supplying of professional witnesses, who will perjure themselves by voting any kind of evidence required, is an important phase of the business.

Then there are, in connection with "the game," the fake doctors, who act in coöperation with the lawyers, and are ready to fix up a man with any kind of a bandage or contrivance that will make him appear to be much more severely injured than he is. This doctor quotes to the patient isolated paragraphs of the medical code of ethics, as a shield to cover his questionable actions, and subjects his patient to the most severe and rigid rules of secrecy. These men are far more despicable than the practitioners of the hospitals, who simply stoop to direct a patient toward a lawyer's office, sharing in the fee. Occasionally they step down into the ranks of the "privates"—as the regular grafters are termed—as did one in Kansas City, who sued a public-service corporation for simulated paralysis, and profited thereby to the extent of $10,000.

Mr. Waters shows how the profession of getting hurt is menacing the private citizen, is raising the cost of doing business, raising insurance and railroad rates and promises to raise municipal tax rates. He promises to give instances of the running of business concerns through the wiles of accident grafters, and to prove that, if some check is not put upon the system, the cost of carrying on mercantile trade may eventually be greater than the profit.

CALIFORNIA.*

Dark-eyed and drowsy-lidded, with face brown
'Neath centuries of suns; with cheeks touched with
The rich carmine of the wild pink's flush, and Wearing the gold of the wild poppy on
Her breast, regal in queenliness; her
Majestic forehead the Sierra's front;
Her breast the swelling hills, smooth-rounded, and
Her lithe limbs the fair valley stretching to
The sea, clad in rich garments of springing
Grasses and set with precious jewels of Bright blossoms multitudinous; with a
Voice of liquid melody, heard in her
Running streams and the soft whispers of the Summer breeze, in the old past, which like a
Dream has vanished, was California,
Loved of the sun, a maiden fair
Wearing the golden arrows of the
Burnished West, flaming with tropic splendor,
As the rich clasp for the sunset mantle
Round her voluptuous shoulders thrown, to
Which the wanton breezes gave caressing touch,
While spicy odors lent their perfumes rare
To all her garments.
Sun-warmed and sun-browned
Were all the races, too, that told their love
Of her, with tawny cheeks, warming beneath
Her ardent gaze. Upon the sunlit heights
They leaned to her and touched her robes with Reverent fingers. The flowers which Lay within her garment's folds had for their Ears soft tongues of speech. Sierra heights were Holy altars from which the mists of morn
Uprose like sacred incense. The running
Streams babbled a prophecy of never-
Ending being as they ran on to see
The ocean's vastness, beyond which lay the Happy hunting-grounds, and the Good Spirit
Smiled. The wigwam's curling smoke rose to the Blue, losing itself in sunshine. Peace was
In all the shining air, and Nature these
Her native sons fed lovingly. How fanned
The giant oaks their bronzed foreheads, and dropped
Them nuts to ease their hunger! How leapt the Wild hare for their arrow's sport, and how stole
The deer into green thickets when their bow
Was strung, and the sea laughed beneath their light
Canoes as swam the fishes for their rude-
Wrought nets. Ah! Nature loved them, her simple
Children, and California's heart was
Warm with their caress; yet still she kept it
Fancy free, and cast coy glances at the Coming years, as if her dusky eyes held
Glance prophetic, and, vision-brightened, saw
The glory of her womanhood. She let Them pass, those tawny chiefs who wooed her, and
The later race of Andalusia's
Sons, and kept her riches and her rarer
Graces veiled, till came the final conquerors.
Ah, then how gathered she her wines and poured
Them for their tasting! The orange bloom she Twined in garlands for her forehead. The rich
Poinsettia made a ruby for her finger.
Her garments of wild grasses she threw off,
Attired herself in robes of golden wheat,
And decked herself with silken tassels of
The growing corn. White roses formed the Border of her mantle, and "cloth of gold"
Was round her garment's hem. Her diamonds
She caught from playing fountains, and the light
Within her eyes was like the sunlight falling
Through swaying palms.
And then her lover came.
The one she was to wed, within his hand
The glorious banner bearing of the Stripes and Stars. And she will be mother of Royal sons, and queen of Freedom's golden West,
And at her gates shall surging empire rest.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

A PRACTICAL MEASURE OF REFORM.

"BY all that we morally admire," says James Martineau, we are practically bound. For, "to discern an excellence is to receive a trust."

In other words, if we have the power to see and appreciate what is morally excellent, we are practically bound to strive for its attainment. Nevertheless, even the best of us sometimes lack the courage to obey the dictate, the imperative mandate from within. We theoretically approve, what we are practically afraid to accomplish.

Knowing the right, we fail to do it.
Loving the good, we fail to pursue it.

Wherein lies the fault?

We admire what is lofty and of fair repute; we are capable of appreciating excellence, but are not strong enough, not willing enough to "receive it as a trust;" to strive for its attainment.

The trouble with us, as it has been with men and women long before us, is, that we often know better than we act. And none were more sadly aware of this disparity between man's knowing and doing than the world's greatest reformers.

This infirmity of the soul, this perversity of the human will, which leaves so many possible benefits to mankind unrealized, was obviously the source of the apostle's lamentation, when he cried, "What I will, that I do not; and what I do, that I will not."

What is the remedy for this disinclination, this persistent refusal to act out the direction of the highest conscience? It is moral courage, the vital power which counteracts all weakness. There is but one all-powerful liberator for the cowardly hesitant souls of men and women, but one power—invincible, urgent, insistent, moral courage!

This starting out with a better moral and spiritual equipment soon avails to sweep away the doubt and distrust, to clear the intellectual and material rubbish and give to the world, to the country, to the city in which we live, all the benefits that come from a high, daring and lofty determination.

We listen to the expression of beautiful thoughts, and noble sentiments, opening our eyes to the great vista not bounded by the sordid thought of accumulation of wealth, improvement of our own condition at expense of another's—and that exaltation is momentary, it departs almost with its incentive. The little turmoil of our own selfish pursuits engrosses us and we no longer lift our eyes and look along that splendid prospect leading to the mountains of sublime spiritual achievement. Would that we might hold fast to that lofty element, lifting us out and above ourselves, making us strong in the faith of righteousness, of endeavor, of justice and of truth, determined to stand undaunted and strong for the good of all!

Let us have truth and justice in the common places of life, in the lowland of everyday existence as on the heights of great occasions. Let us have the moral courage to ever hold them supreme and thus we shall have hold of the mighty lever that shall raise society, the only practical reformatory measure for it proceeds from the heart and conscience of man and is bound to elevate and maintain. Thus only can we hope to have doing as well as desiring, or that practice of precepts which cements saying and doing lifts the weak and doubting to the plane of endeavor and achievement.

We all know of instances in which, though theoretically devoted to high purpose, we violate our own convictions, the grandest of moral laws, simply because we have not the moral courage to act on our conscience's bidding when the mandate comes.

What is the result of this passivity, this hesitancy, this dereliction on the part of one? The lowering not only of the individual but of the society of which the individual is the component. The injuring not only of the person yielding to cowardice but the retrogression of the great fabric to which he belongs is the direct result of each shrinking from moral courage on the part of man. Speak, when compelled by principle, even if the whole world be silent! Have the courage of your conviction and demand right for right's sake!

Let us remember the brotherhood of man, the claim that the dumb and the enslaved have upon us. Let us insist on having more humane treatment of man and beast when injustice and cruelty rise in the ascendant. Better by far one practical exemplification of moral courage than a thousand theories and exhortations.

Do we believe in love and sympathy and justice and truth? Then let us bring them into the place in which we find ourselves, day by day. Is sympathy the golden key which never fails to unlock the human heart? Let us try it, here and now. Will justice prevent much of the suffering of the world, then let us demand it in every concern of life. Will truth make us free? Then why cling to the iron fetters of pretense, of deceit, of vicious policy, or debasing falsehood? Off with each of the enslaving yokes which have held us down too long! Have the moral courage to stand for right whatever the result. It is better to make enemies nobly than to win friends infamously."

Out with the base inhabitants of the human heart, indifference, apathy, pride, prejudice, breeders all of moral cowardice! Let us cast out from our being these detriments and gather in the new light of the twentieth century. Let us have the fortitude and courage to be ourselves, living our own lives in our own way, striving to attain the highest ideals, emulating the noblest examples, doing our best for all.

Thus we can establish moral courage and make it become the most potent factor for the purity and uplifting of society, the only practical and personal as well as communal reformatory measure.

Guantanamo Bay. By Frank G. Carpenter.

BIG NAVAL STATION.

UNCLE SAM IS BUILDING ONE TO DEFEND PANAMA CANAL.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, October, 1905.—The Navy Department is proceeding slowly in fitting out Guantanamo Bay as an up-to-date naval station. I understand the work is going on as fast as the appropriations will permit, but the demand for the place is such that Congress will probably vote a big sum of money toward it during the coming session. At present the only buildings that have been constructed are a storehouse, a mule stable and some quarters for officers. A landing wharf about 150 feet long has been built upon piles and preparations are being made to put in one of the largest dry docks in the world. The coral islands or keys which lie in the harbor have been cleared of the malarious mangrove trees which border their shores, and great efforts have been made to wipe out the mosquitoes. The work is now doing with Cuban laborers under the direction of our naval officers, but good men are hard to hire, and so far the work of construction is slow. The Amphitrite and the Monongahela are stationed in the bay, and the naval officers and marines have their quarters upon them. The little Vixen is used as a supply ship, coming here to Santiago every other day.

GUANTANAMO BAY SHOWING THE NEW WHARF.

In Guantanamo Bay.

Guantanamo Bay will undoubtedly be one of our most important naval stations. It has the only large harbor on the south or east coast of Cuba. It lies right here on the Windward passage, which is the great avenue from the Atlantic into the Caribbean and the main door for all vessels going to the Panama Canal. It is just around the corner from Cape Maisi, at the northeastern end of Cuba, and about seven hours by steam from Hayti.

In going to Panama the first bit of Cuban land one sees is Cape Maisi. A little later he gets into the Windward passage, and can see Cuba on one side and Haiti on the other. Guantanamo is not visible, as after a time the boats get pretty well out in the passage. It is so situated, however, that it commands the passage, and thus controls not only the vessels going to Panama, but those to Venezuela and all parts of the West Indies by this route. It is only two days by fast vessel from Guantanamo to Colon, and about the same distance to La Guayra, in Venezuela. It is just about one day's steaming to the middle of the Caribbean, or as it is now called, "the American Mediterranean."

The advantage of this station in protecting the Caribbean will be enormous. Should any European power attempt to make this sea a battleground its boats will have to sail about two weeks before they can reach it. The men will not know when to expect an attack, and they will be in about the same position as the Russian marines who came around the world to be defeated by Admiral Togo. Our ships can start out from Guantanamo with their men fresh, and can be fighting within about a day after leaving port.

A Great Coaling Station.

Guantanamo will be our chief coaling station in this part of the world. When the present arrangements are completed at least 50,000 tons of coal will be stored here, and, in time of war, the supply will be double that amount. Coal can be brought cheaply from Norfolk or Newport News, and our vessels will come here for fuel. One of the most important things in naval warfare is to be within easy reach of coal, and all modern conveniences of loading and unloading will be supplied. Some of the coal depots will be on the island in the harbor. The water is deep close to the shores of these islands, and some of them are so small that several ships can be loaded from the same island at the same time.

A big supply of ammunition and other necessities will be kept there. There will be large machine works, and every arrangement for the rapid repair of disabled vessels. If a gunboat is injured in an engagement in the Caribbean, it can be towed to Guantanamo and there repaired in the dry dock.

A Look at the Harbor.

Guantanamo Bay has many advantages over Santiago. When Cervera was bottled up there his ships had to go out to sea in single file, and Hobson almost clogged the entrance when he sunk the Merrimac. The entrance to Guantanamo is more than a mile wide. It is so wide that a half a dozen great battleships can steam out of it at one time and send their broadsides at the vessels of the enemy. There are highlands on each side of the entrance and fortifications will probably be made there to aid in its protection.

Passing into the harbor, our vessels will have a broad and deep waterway extending far back into the country. The eastern portion, including all the territory which we have, is about ten miles long and five miles wide. This includes the lands about the harbor. It is not regular in shape and the water and land area is about forty square miles, or enough to cover about 160 quarter section farms. The waters are big enough to contain all the gunboats we will ever have on the Atlantic, with ample room to spare. As to the depth, this is just right. It ranges from sixty to eighty or 100 feet, deep enough to enable the biggest gunboats to sail in and allow their anchors to catch the ground. It is quite as bad to have water too deep in a harbor as not deep enough. If the water should be several hundred feet deep near the shore, anchoring would be impossible. Moreover, as it is now, if a lighter sinks in this harbor it goes down deep enough not to obstruct navigation, and at the same time not so deep but that the divers can raise it.

A Big Rifle Range.

There are ample means at Guantanamo for practice work on the part of the men. On one side of the harbor there is a great dry swamp which nature has fitted for a rifle range. One hundred men can practice long range shooting there at the same time without danger of injury to anyone. The swamp is surrounded by hills. I understand that considerable practicing has already been done there.

It is not improbable that Guantanamo will eventually be connected by railroad with Santiago. The distance between the two points is about fifty miles, and such a road would give the naval station access to the Cuban railway system. As Uncle Sam is now situated, Cuba is one of his dependencies. He will always have to defend it against other nations, and he must protect it in case he has war with other nations. If we should have international troubles Cuba would probably be occupied by the United States and a railroad connection with Guantanamo would be very important, as we could then ship naval supplies from Florida to Havana, and, in short, bring this naval station within about twelve hours by sea of our shores.

At present there are but few settlements in the neighborhood of the harbor. The port for the sugar plantations is at La Caimanera, which is on the bay much farther inland, a railroad going from the port to the town of Guantanamo and thence on for six miles beyond. I understand that the land is very good in the especially so in the valleys over the are in the lowlands some large owned by Americans, and coffee grows The country is especially health, and time a sort of Newport for the rich of the eastern end of the island. One of the an avenue running from his residence The road was covered with shells and lemon and orange trees. Another planter region is said to have owned 300 acres time before the war, and to have gotten annual income of $40,000 from his coffee that the United States owns property here, onies will probably be formed to buy up of the immediate interior.

Guarding the Caribbean.

It behooves the United States to hurry stations on the Caribbean Sea. We are interests in this part of the world every year. through the Monroe doctrine, taken upon office of an international policeman. We have put the handcuffs on Santo Domingo and debt prisoner, as it were, and there is no we shall have trouble with other islands. bean Sea is to be the American Mediterranean American government will have to protect it. a great deal by means of this naval station namo, but it should have equally strong other passages, such as the Mona passage, Rico and Santo Domingo, and at the Virgin tween Porto Rico and the Danish Islands. have a station at the eastern end of Porto lebra, a little island which lies just off coast. It commands the entrance to that said to control it quite as well as Gibraltar entrance to the Mediterranean. We should, own the Danish Islands on the other side We offered to buy St. Thomas some time mark refused. It is believed that her refusal by Germany, who may possibly want a there for herself in the future.

The Panama Canal.

We need these naval stations especially the Panama Canal. The Windward passage, Hayti and Cuba, is well supplied by Guantanamo is the main highway. All our ships from the isthmus go past Guantanamo, and all from the North Atlantic do likewise. We Samana Bay, at the other end of Santo Domingo trol the Mona passage, and we are guarding passage by our naval stations of Key West Honda on the other side of Havana.

Samana Bay is so close to the Mona commands it. The bay is thirty miles wide, with a deep-water basin ten miles miles wide with good holding ground. It is mountain ranges on its north and south the mountains rising to about 1500 feet. ridge on the north runs out into a peninsula miles wide. This peninsula can be fortified tack by land, and thus make a coaling The bay could easily be defended by works trance. Samana Bay would shelter our whole squadron and be of enormous value to us.

Key West is important not only on account ribbean, but as a defense to the Gulf of Mexico Mississippi River, and the same may be Honda. Key West lies right in the entrance of Mexico, and it also commands the Yucatan around the corner. As it is now, we have from New Orleans through this channel bean, a great deal of our trade with Panama tween Colon and the gulf ports. The United pany steamers run regular lines to Panama big fruit estates about the Chiriqui lagoon.

Our Islands About Panama.

Uncle Sam has islands on both sides of the nal. He has several in Panama Bay, be almost at the entrance to the canal pleted. Others have formed the landing steamers going north and south. On the the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for its headquarters. Prof. Pickering's Theory.

THE PACIFIC OCEAN IN THE HOLE LEFT BY THE MOON.

By a Special Contributor.

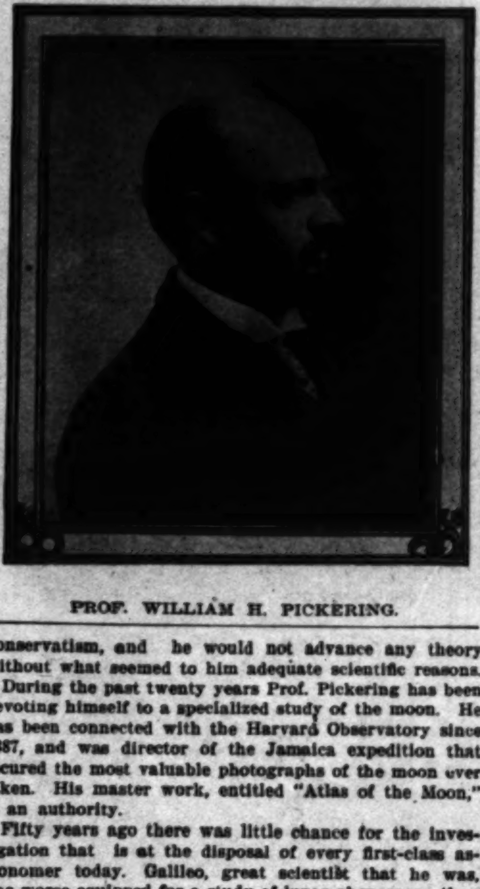
THE man who knows more about the moon than perhaps any other living astronomer, Prof. William H. Pickering, director of Harvard Observatory, has just returned from Hawaii with a novel theory regarding the origin of the Queen of the Night.

A marked resemblance he discovered between the mountains of the moon and the volcanic mountains of the Hawaiian Islands, confirming his belief that the moon was originally part of the earth and occupied that part which is now filled with the waters of the Pacific Ocean.

Prof. Pickering is strongly of the opinion that when the moon was thrown off into space, some force kept the islands in their place. The flight of the moon left the hollow basin, now known as the Pacific Ocean, the remanider becoming the land now known as the Hawaiian Islands.

It is a theory that has many strong points of confirmation. The reputation of Prof. Pickering itself is a point in its favor. He has made many notable achievements, including his discovery of the elusive and erratic heavenly body known as Phoebe, the ninth and last satellite of Saturn.

All his work has been marked by the most careful conservatism, and he would not advance any theory without what seemed to him adequate scientific reasons.



PROF. WILLIAM H. PICKERING.

During the past twenty years Prof. Pickering has been devoting himself to a specialized study of the moon. He has been connected with the Harvard Observatory since 1887, and was director of the Jamaica expedition that secured the most valuable photographs of the moon ever taken. His master work, entitled "Atlas of the Moon," is an authority.

Fifty years ago there was little chance for the investigation that is at the disposal of every first-class astronomer today. Galileo, great scientist that he was, was worse equipped for a study of lunar phenomena than the student in the poorest observatory in the United States today.

Most people have no idea how much has been found out about the moon. Indeed it is today better known to the geographers than many portions of Africa and Asia.

Its mountains are clearly marked and have names; much is known of its soil, and physicists have even gone so far as to weigh it, an experiment that showed the weight to be one-eightieth of the earth's or seventy-three trillion tons.

With all these facts at hand, it becomes an easy matter to examine into the pros and cons of the Pickering theory of the moon's creation.

Geology has shown that more millions of years ago than we have any count, the earth was a hot liquid mass, on which floated a crust some thirty-five miles thick. At that time as today, the earth revolved on its axis, but not once in twenty-four hours.

No, indeed, the earth was so much faster then that it made the trip in three hours. When that terrific speed was attained, something split and five thousand cubic million miles of matter was thrown off into space by centrifugal force to stay close always to the revolving body known as earth, and destined to take the name of moon.

This is the scientific explanation of the moon. It fits wonderfully with traditions by the native Hawaiians, beliefs which have been handed down from generation to generation, and which tell of a solid body which split like an egg, part of it going up into the air, and the rest being scattered around the Pacific Ocean in the form of myriad islands.

Any intelligent Hawaiian knows this story, in fact it has become almost ingrained into the superstitious religious beliefs.

Naturally the breaking off of such a huge piece from the earth's surface must have left its scar. And this scar, or basin, or cavity, is today filled with the waters of the Pacific Ocean.

A comparison of the surfaces of the Hawaiian Islands and moon bear out strikingly the Pickering idea. Volcanic upheavals show mountains beside which the Alps would dwindle into comparative insignificance. One of these eminences, towering 23,800 feet above the plain below, is named after Sir Isaac Newton.

The entire face of the moon is seared and scarred with volcanoes and their craters. These lunar craters are not like those of the earth, having orifices of a few hundred feet. Instead on the moon the craters are sometimes as much as a hundred miles across.

But while they are inconceivably larger, these volcanic formations bear a startling resemblance to those of the Hawaiian Islands. They are all believed to be extinct. In the center of each is to be found a small hill about half as high as the volcano itself, and frequently dotting the sides are enormous fissures where the surcharged earth split to release the flow of burning lava and exploding gases.

This much is known of the moon. Its conditions present many marked analogies to the surface of the Sandwich Islands. Here is the same evidence of an immense cataclysm that tore asunder the face of the earth and sent great chunks whirling in all directions. The highest caldrous of seething volcanoes are to be found in Hawaii, the largest member of the group, at its southeastern extremity. The formation of the volcano is the same as the telescope shows those on the moon to be.

There is the same circular rampart, inclosing a basin, the receptacle for th lava, and in the middle of the crater is the little eminence mentioned in connection with volcanic formations on the moon.

In the island of Hawaii the southern volcano of Mauna-Loa, or the "Great Mountain," rises to the height of 13,760 feet, or about 3000 feet above the vegetable zone.

The crater, or, rather, group of craters, collectively named the Mokuaveoveo, open on the very summit of the mountain, so as to form a symmetrical cavity disposed in the direction from north to south.

In the center lies the vast primitive crater, which has a mean diameter of about 2200 yards and a depth of over 1000 feet. Mounds of scoria, some in ignition, some extinct, rise from the bottom of this pit, north and south of which two semicircular terraces over 400 feet high represent two halves of a crater inscribed, so to say, on the periphery of the central opening.

Vast lava streams have been discharged from the very rim of Mauna-Loa, as in 1880, when about 2,200,000,000 cubic feet of burning matter flowed down the slopes of the mountain. But the molten lavas mostly escape from openings far below the upper cone.

Thus in 1855 such a stream overflowed from the northeast side, and after covering a space of 300 square miles reached the plain of Hilo, close to the coast. Three years later another crater was opened six miles north of the central one, discharging a double stream, which, flowing west, half filled up Kihola Bay.

This tendency of the lava to spread and form a sort of plain of cold slag is well worth a word of comment. A similar condition exists on the moon. Surrounding all the great volcanoes are immense stretches of lava which Galileo and the astronomers of early days wrongly thought to be seas. Acting on the theory that they fere water, the scientists of that day gave them names which still survive, though investigations by the moderns have gravely raised a doubt that there is any water whatever on the moon.

The telescope has brought the moon to within forty miles of the earth, the camera has made it possible to secure accurate records of its surface. True we know only one side, for as the moon revolves on its axis in exactly the same time it takes to revolve around the earth, the other hemisphere must ever remain a closed book.

BAGATELLE.

Draw down the curtain; stir the fire;
  And set the kettle steaming!
The autumn dusk is stealing down—
  'Tis time for tea—and dreaming.

A Chinese pot of shape grotesque

A truce to aftermath! What if
  It prove a sleep preventive?

Don't light the lamp. The fire glow
  And dreams agree far better;
Imagination, like a steed,
  Flies, then, without a fetter!

The subtle beverage to my brain

Of mountain height and cañon wild

A lovely face—a sheen of hair
  White as the snows . . . Eyes tender
As Love. But, ah! a vacant chair
  Mocks me across the fender!

This is the hour she loved the best—
  "No lights," she aye insisted.
This is her hour . . . alas that she
  Nowhere, no time, existed!

The lands I've wandered in are not;
  My picture face is banished;
My tea is done; it's hasheesh—dreams
  Have utterly evanished.

The Filipino's Chance. By Frederic J. Haskin.

QUESTION OF INDEPENDENCE.

PLAN CONGRESS OUTLINED FOR GOVERNMENT OF OUR WARDS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MANILA, September, 1905.—Are the Filipinos ready for independence? When will they be ready to govern themselves? How long before the American government will give them a chance to manage their own affairs? These questions are being asked on both sides of the ocean. The native politician wants to know so that he can set his sails; the American capitalist would like to find out before he makes his investments; and the world in general is waiting with curiosity to see what is going to be the result of the great American experiment. In the outset it should be stated that all conclusions in discussing this subject are conjectural. The question at issue is purely problematical. There is no precedent in history to the American government's extraordinary position here; no man is wise enough to forecast the future; and no two men agree exactly as to the past.

The more time one spends in investigating the matter, the greater becomes his perplexity. The student who thought one thing yesterday has changed his mind today. Most of the authors and correspondents who write upon the question are prejudiced one way or another. They go to extremes of praise or criticism of the administration, generally without going to much trouble to procure their information. There are so many sides to the question that a case can be made out to sustain almost any position. The foreign critics who have so much to say invariably make the mistake of overlooking or ignoring the American policy. What their governments have done, or might do, has nothing to do with the matter from the American viewpoint.

Untouched by Western Civilization

McKinley Prayed for Light.

Doubtless the most concise statement ever offered in explanation of how the American government came to hold the island was that made by President McKinley to some callers at his private office in the White House in November, 1899, which was as follows:

"Before you go I would like to say a word about the Philippines. The truth is, I didn't want them, and when they came to us, as a gift from the gods, I did not know what to do with them. When the Spanish war broke out, Dewey was at Hongkong, and I orderer him to go to Manila, and he had to, because, if defeated, he had no place to refit on that side of the globe, and if the Dons were victorious they would likely cross the Pacific and ravage our Oregon and California coasts. And so he had to destroy the Spanish fleet, and did it! But that was as far as I thought then. When next I realized that the Philippines had dropped into our lap, I confess I did not know what to do with them. I sought counsel from all sides—Democrats as well as Republicans—but got little help. I thought first we would take Manila; then Luzon; then other islands, perhaps. I walked the floor of the White House night after night until midnight; and I am not ashamed to tell you, gentlemen, that I went down on my knees and prayed Almighty God for light and guidance more than once.

"And one night late it came to me this way—I don't know how it was, but it came: (1) That we would not give them back to Spain—that would be cowardly and dishonorable; (2) That we could not turn them over to France or Germany—our commercial rivals in the Orient—that would be bad business and discreditable; (3) That we could not leave them to themselves, as they were unfit for self-government, and they would soon have anarchy and misrule worse than Spain's was; (4) That there was nothing for us to do but to take them all, and to educate the Filipinos and uplift them and Christianize them, and, by God's grace, do the very best we could by them, as our fellow men for whom Christ also died. And then I went to bed, and went to sleep, and slept soundly, and the next morning I sent for the chief engineer of the War Department (our mapmaker), and told him to put the Philippines on the map of the United States; and there they are, and there they will stay while I am President!"

Most Americans now believe that the lamented McKinley was honest in this humanitarian declaration, yet, at the time the occupation was undertaken, there were many who disputed the good motives which he proclaimed. There was plenty of opposition to the policy at home, and other nations with possessions in this part of the world made merry at the mere suggestion of our philanthropic principles. As a manifest of good intentions, the programme of administering the Philippines for the benefit of the Filipinos was outlined at once.

The Hope of the Future

Ignorant of his rights

Civil Government's Hard Task.

Civil government was instituted and the native given an opportunity to take part therein. The civil administration has indeed had a stormy time of it. It has been more sorely tried than Job with all his boils. It has had to withstand the combined fire of hostile military influence, impatient American exploiters, ambitious native politicians, the anti-expansionists in America, the critical foreign powers, and disgruntled Spaniards. While it is admitted that its inauguration was premature, it was a political necessity—to fulfill the pledge that had been made, and to try the capacity of the Filipino.

Although many still contend that the Filipinos are incapable of ever being able to manage themselves, and that the attempt to prepare them for that end can only result in failure, the good intentions of the American government are established. Many mistakes have been made in the administration here, but the country has not been looted to fatten the treasury at Washington. None of those who question the ultimate success [illegible] and who have indulged in such exhaustive [illegible] our methods, can say that we have diverted [illegible] of the land to our own profit. The resources [illegible] try have been used in the commendable [illegible] ter the condition of the people.

America Has Kept Faith.

No matter what measure of failure [illegible] the extraordinary work we have attempted [illegible] erosity of the motives that prompted the [illegible] ways be an honor to our country. The [illegible] procedure of the American government has [illegible] skirts of suspicion. Its period of probation [illegible] is the Filipino who is now on trial. The native [illegible] favored in every particular. Every good [illegible] be found has been given an opportunity to [illegible] management of affairs; in fact this encouragement [illegible] been carried so far that incompetent men have [illegible] in office.

Yet the questions at the beginning of this [illegible] constantly going the rounds. The impression [illegible] exist that there is some uncertainty in America [illegible] what to do with the Philippines. This is [illegible] American Congress has declared itself without [illegible] tion. It has said that the Filipino shall have [illegible] agement of his affairs when he demonstrates [illegible] ity. The question when he will develop [illegible] ity to secure his independence is really where [illegible] ence of opinion arises. One man is quoted [illegible] one date, and some other authority is quoted [illegible] appointed another.

Word of Congress Final.

The fact is that no one man's word is final [illegible] ter. The authority lies solely with the American [illegible] gress. Since I came to Manila a delegation of [illegible] native politicians called upon Gov. Wright [illegible] that they did not like the position of [illegible] which they were placed. The leader went on to [illegible] be understood that the word of [illegible] was final in this particular, but [illegible] it would be advisable for Congress [illegible] declaration of its intentions; that if the American [illegible] ernment expected to go away within a decade [illegible] well to say so; also that if it expected [illegible] hundred years it should be stated. The Governor [illegible] by citing them to the act of Congress of July [illegible] which is as emphatic as anything could [illegible] far as a declaration of intentions is concerned.

Two misguided Patriots

The particular passage relating to the future [illegible] ment of the Philippines, after approving the [illegible] President in creating the Philippine Commission [illegible] "That whenever the existing insurrection in the [illegible] pine Islands shall have ceased, and the condition [illegible] eral and complete peace shall have been [illegible] therein and the fact shall be certified to the [illegible] the Philippine Commission, the President, [illegible] satisfied thereof, shall order a census of the [illegible] Islands to be taken by the Philippine [illegible] sion; . . .

"That two years after the completion [illegible] of the census, in case such condition of general [illegible] plete peace, with recognition of the authority [illegible] United States, shall have continued in the [illegible] not inhabited by Moros and other non-Christian [illegible] and such fact shall have been certified [illegible] by the Philippine Commission, the President, [illegible] satisfied thereof, shall direct said commission [illegible] the commission shall call, a general [illegible] choice of delegates to a popular assembly [illegible] of said territory in the Philippine Islands, [illegible] known as the Philippine Assembly. After [illegible] shall have convened and organized, all [illegible] powers conferred on the Philippine Commission shall be vested in a legislature consisting of two houses—the Philippine Commission and the Philippine Assembly."

Future Rests With Filipino.

Nothing could be more to the point. The whole program is clearly outlined. If the Filipino is in earnest about wanting independence and is capable of exercising the rights thereof, he certainly has the chance. The United States is living up to its part of the agreement in every respect. The commission has been established as provided, the census has been taken, and the assembly will be inaugurated two years hence, if in the meantime, a "condition of general and complete peace, with recognition of the authority of the United States, shall have continued."

It is plainly up to the people of the islands themselves. The mass of the Filipinos should be made to clearly understand that the only way for them to realize their ambition is by obeying the law. They should be impressed with the fact that every disturbance which occurs in the country postpones rather than hastens the day of their freedom. The agitator who incites the people to make a show of discontent in the hope of discouraging the American administration, is the arch enemy of his people, because the assembly will not be called unless peace "shall have continued" for two years after the taking of the census. The census has been completed, but there is not a "condition of general and complete peace" in the islands at this time.

The leading Filipinos who have the good of their people at heart should proclaim to the ignorant masses that the idea of a few bands of ladrones frightening the American government into withdrawing from the islands is futile and absurd; they should make it known far and near that the ladrones are at this moment postponing the very thing they are clamoring for—the law is explicit in saying that there can be no assembly until there is "a condition of general and complete peace." It is safe to say that the first session of the assembly, even if it is not called for several years, will be disappointing in that it will be marked by more red fire than statesmanship.

Not Ready for Independence.

The truth of the whole situation is this: The Filipino is not ready for self-government, and will not be ready for so many years that there is no use in discussing the probable time when he will be. Generally speaking he has more authority now than his capacity warrants. Giving it to him in broken doses was not a mistake, because his aptitude was unknown and it had to be established. There are able, loyal Filipinos, but they are too few in number to undertake the burden of government. They would soon be overwhelmed by the unscrupulous element whose desire for personal gain is stronger than their spirit of patriotism.

We have here a population, 90 per cent. of which is ignorant, and the bulk of the educated element is seeking power merely to profit by it. It is certain that we cannot graft a republican form of government on this people in a few years, but there is hope that it can be done in time. The masses must have a better understanding of their rights, and the class which will govern a higher sense of public duty, before there can be any prospect of the experiment being wholly successful.

Several generations will have to be educated before the Filipinos can safely be trusted with the management of their own affairs—and even then they may not be equal to it. In the meantime no attention should be paid to the ravings of native politicians. Their demand for immediate independence is prompted either by misguided or selfish motives. The inhabitants of these islands have more liberty now than they ever had in the past (they have all the freedom that the people of the United States enjoy, except the right to be tried by jury and the privilege of carrying arms), and infinitely more security than they would have if left to themselves. The strong arm of American authority is here to guard them from their enemies within and without.

While the effect that education will have upon them is problematical, there is no doubt concerning the hopelessness of their prospect if the protection of our government is withdrawn now, or in the immediate future. They should be told in no uncertain terms to abandon the idea of immediate independence. All talk of this kind merely stimulates the ambition of the politicians and generates unrest. An outright pronouncement to that effect might cause some commotion among the element that aspires to power, but it would only be a flurry. The Filipino is now free to work and live in peace. He has the chance to develop whatever there is in him. Let him do it.

LADY SHOEBLACKS.

What is the feminine of "shoeblack?" Most people would answer that the calling is as irredeemably masculine as that of the policeman, and that there is no need to invent a word uncalled for by actual fact. But a visit to Zurich will result in a different opinion, for immediately on emerging from the railway station one comes across three middle-aged women kneeling at their polishing blocks, who are eager to impart luster to the traveler's boots. In the interval of leisure the three women may be seen knitting stockings, an activity closely allied to their main vocation. Search the rest of the industrious Swiss city and you will with difficulty be able to get your boots cleaned. But the triple alliance of lady shoeblacks at the railway approach will always welcome you with smiling faces and willing hands.—Boston Advertiser.

"What do you think of the simple life?" asked the earnest friend.

"It's a fine idea," answered Senator Sorghum as he [illegible]. "We do the real living and let the [illegible] public furnish the simplicity."—[Washington

Trafalgar Day.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF LORD NELSON'S DEATH.

By a Special Contributor.

TOGO and Nelson link a century of naval achievement.

The world today is ringing with praise of the Japanese admiral. One hundred years ago, October 21, 1805, it mixed its cheers with tears, for the heroic victory of Trafalgar, when Nelson, after defeating the French and Spanish, and breaking the naval power of Napoleon, went to his death in the very hour of triumph.

Trafalgar now belongs to the whole world. The celebration of its one hundredth anniversary can no longer be confined to England. Its importance as an epoch-making incident in the naval history of modern times has come to be appreciated in all countries, but in no one more than the United States. Of present day naval strategists, it was an American, Capt. Alfred T. Mahan, in his book, "The Influence of Sea Power on History," who most thoroughly outlined all that was accomplished when Nelson defeated Villeneuve.

Without Trafalgar there might have been no Farragut, no Dewey. The great victory of October 21, 1805, taught this great lesson that the day of the hand-to-hand conflict, one vessel against another, had passed, and that the great naval power of the future would be the one that maintained the great fleet and knew how to maneuver it.

LORD NELSON, VICTOR OF TRAFALGAR.

This lesson learned by England and the United States, and in the last decade by Japan, has enabled the first two to emerge triumphant in their wars, and lifted the last named into a place with the great nations of the world.

It is these facts that give particular contemporary interest to the life of the great British sea fighter, whose marriage to the young widow of Dr. Nisbet, an English physician, and subsequent separation from her when he fell a victim to the charms of the beautiful Lady Hamilton, form a romantic chapter in English history.

Briefly speaking, Trafalgar grew out of the desire of Napoleon, then at the zenith of his glory, to invade England. To this end a strong fleet of French and Spanish ships was divided into three squadrons at Brest, Toulon and Rochefort, the whole under the command of Admiral Villeneuve. There is little doubt that had the fleet succeeded in defeating Nelson, England would have lain at the mercy of the Emperor, for the British defenses were dependent entirely on the navy.

By masterly maneuvering, the British squadron worked to keep the French fleets from effecting a juncture, until the British admiral was able to mass his forces and deal the final blow that should make or unmake England at Trafalgar.

It was on the 19th of October that Villeneuve, spurred on by the sharp orders of Napoleon, put to sea from Cadiz.

The eager Nelson, waiting far outside, at once made for the Straits of Gibraltar to bar the entrance to the Mediterranean. He had only twenty-seven ships with which to meet thirty-three French and Spanish ships of the line and five frigates and two brigs.

But Nelson profited by the confidence of his men and their worship of his daring and bravery.

Nelson's plan was carefully prearranged. His ships were to approach in two parallel lines, nearly a mile apart, one column under command of himself, the other looked after by Admiral Collingwood. Nelson was on the Victory, with seventy-four guns, commanding twelve ships on the right. Collingwood, on the left, commanded fifteen ships.

The French and Spaniards advanced in five columns, in a straggling line across the British course.

It was 11:30 when Cape Trafalgar loomed twelve miles in the distance, that Nelson raised in flags his famous signal to the other ships of the fleet: "England expects every man to do his duty." It is a message that has gone down into history as one of the great warlike appeals of all time.

In the center of the French line, which was curved away from the point of attack, was the flagship, the Bucentaure, a magnificent fighter, of eighty guns. Admiral Villeneuve had chosen this as the ship from which he should direct the battle.

Vice-Admiral Alava was on the Santa Anna, a few ships away. The two British leaders instantly picked out these two ships as the point of their attack, Collingwood making for the Santa Anna and Nelson for the Bucentaure.

The Royal Sovereign, Collingwood's flagship, had the advantage of position, and was probably a bit fleeter than the remainder of the British ships, and she got into the enemy by 12 o'clock, three-quarters of an hour ahead of the others. This forced Lord Nelson, to whom the smoke of battle was sweetest perfume, to fume in impatience, while his fellow-admiral was raking the Santa Anna from stem to stern.

Side by side the Royal Sovereign and the Santa Anna battled, the decks of each running with gore, and the sailors of both ships fighting with amazing bravery. Collingwood profited by the better training of his fleet, and, receiving aid from the other ships, eventually sank or captured twelve of the sixteen ships forming Alava's rear line.

Meantime the commander of the British forces had made his way into the action.

The Victory raked the Bucentaure, and was on a fair way to complete her destruction when a ship to leeward blocked the way. This led to the memorable hand-to-hand battle between the Victory and the Redoubtable. The Frenchmen on this ship justified its name, for they stuck to the conflict till only thirty-five of a crew of 643 were left.

At 1:30, just when victory was in the grasp of the British, Nelson was struck by a bullet fired from the enemy's rigging. He fell on the deck mortally wounded.

But even in the midst of his pain, he did not forget the obligation he owed to England. As they carried him down into the cockpit already crowded with the dead and dying, he covered his face and epaulettes with a handkerchief, so that the fighting sailors might not recognize him and become panic-stricken over his loss. When they brought him news that the victory was complete, and that fifteen of the enemy's ships were captured, he expressed his regret that the number had fallen short of the twenty on which he had counted.

Lord Nelson died a few minutes after the Achille and Intrepide had blown up.

The triumph of the British arms was complete. The French and Spaniards lost eighteen ships, and those that got away were so badly damaged as to be worthless for future fighting. Admirals Villeneuve and Cisneros were taken prisoners, Admirals Alava and Gravina were wounded and the French rear-admiral killed.

The body of Lord Nelson was taken back to England in a leaden casket, and when he was interred at St. Paul's Cathedral, in the midst of one of the most pretentious ceremonies that England ever saw, his casket was wrapped in the flag that had flown at the masthead of the Victory during the battle, and had marked his presence there.

It is a remarkable fact that this flag, which should be one of the most prized relics in the British Museum, is now in the United States, and is the property of an American, W. A. Davison, of Cincinnati, O.

The story of how it came here is a romance in itself. When the time came to lower the body of Nelson into the grave, the British sailors who had been with him all through that famous conflict, rebelled at the idea of interring the flag. A dozen of them grabbed it, each struggling for a fragment in remembrance of their leader.

It was saved from destruction by John Clyne, the sailing master of the Victory, who was then in charge of the men. Before the work of demolition had gone far, he got possession of it and concealed it under his waistcoat, where, rough and ready jack tar that he was, he was able to protect it.

John Clyne kept his part until his death, leaving it to his widow, Margaret, who in turn cherished the memorial until she died. It then became the property of their son, who brought it with him to America about ten years ago. From him it passed into the possession of Mr. Davidson, who guards it very jealously.

The flag is, or rather originally was, four feet wide and eight feet long, and is one solid piece of cloth made of sea island cotton, interwoven with silk. This is unusual, for most flags are made of different pieces of different colors, it being easier to connect the pieces than to color different parts of the same piece in different lines.

The main ground is white and the coloring still clear and bright, was evidently put in by a process then used in the manufacture of war flags, that of protecting all but the parts to be tinted between wooden blocks tightly screwed together while the flag was immersed in the dye. It is precisely alike and equally bright on both sides, showing that it could have been colored by no ordinary process of printing.

GOLF AFTER MIDNIGHT.

This is a description of a game of golf which was played in the Shetland Islands one night this summer: "The first ball was driven from the tee at five minutes to 12 (midnight), and a full double round of eighteen holes was played. The match terminated at 2:30. The light was so good that the balls could easily be seen where they lay after having been driven well from the tee, and there was never any difficulty in finding them. Shortly after 12 o'clock the lark was heard in full song, and it was broad daylight by the time the match was finished. The experiment was such a success that it was repeated on several subsequent occasions."

The Hague Tribunal.

A Vast Field of Usefulness Open Before It.

By a Special Contributor.

River, Bridge and Street Scene, The Hague

WHAT a beautiful city is The Hague! A fitting place for the white dove of peace to find her permanent abode! It possesses very many beautiful parks in which the trees are of magnificent growth. Of course there is plenty of water, and this is used to great advantage in making the parks beautiful. They are works of art, with their trees, sheets of water and green sward. It is the true type of art which seems perfectly natural. Below The Hague is Scaveningue on the sea, one of the prettiest seaside resorts in all the world. Between the city and this watering place the whole distance is like a beautiful park. The city is well built with a great many fine structures, good streets and handsome bridges.

But cities are more or less like circuses—all pretty near alike. But The Hague tribunal is a new thing on the earth. Solomon said there is nothing new under the sun. But Solomon lived long ago. The city of Solomon came to be called Salem, which means peace. But the name was only an inspiration. A man greater than Solomon, called the Prince of Peace, saw so little of his reign on earth, or prospect of it, that he said himself: "There shall be wars and rumors of wars." There certainly have been enough of them in spite of the message which 2000 years ago was proclaimed on the hills of Judea, "Peace on earth, and good will to men."

Well, the world is very old, and civilization is of small growth. In spite of all appearances, the Hague tribunal may yet, and before long as time is counted in such great matters, become the greatest institution the world has yet seen. The twentieth century may see the temple of Janus closed to open no more. The world of today would like to make its swords into plow shares and its cannon into industrial machines.

I have spoken in a former article of this as the age of manhood and of the possibility of the people in a mass exacting of their governments a more reasonable way of settling disputes than by recourse to arms. Since that article was written much has taken place to confirm the view then set out. In Russia the people at the moment I am writing [last April] are having much to say as to carrying on the war with Japan, although Russia is the most tyrannous of despotisms. Without a voice in the government of their country by any form of law, they have found a way to make themselves heard. Napoleon said: "An army marches on its stomach." It fights on its stomach, too. If the people had refused to raise a hand to send out trains of provisions the war must have come to an end.

What a German Says.

The war footing of Germany is put at 5,000,000 fighting men. One-fifth of these are Socialists of one type or another. Some think the State ought to do everything from mending your shoes and cooking your soup to declaring war and making peace. Another wing thinks there should be no State, but a sort of political millennium—and so they go. But it is not unlikely that they might all act together to stop an unpopular war. In an empire like Germany where the government is so strong, how can this be done? Hear what an intelligent German says:

"The Reichstag alone can vote money for any purpose. If the people did not sanction the voting of supplies their representatives would not dare to vote them. Without money war could not be carried on." Someone standing by said: "A man like the present Emperor would take the money without leave if he thought it for the best interests of Germany." Where would he get it to take?

What War Costs.

The war treasury in the castle of Spandau is a large sum of ready gold. How far would it go? There would not be a gold piece left by the time the army was put into motion. The Invalides' fund is four times as large as the treasure at Spandau. A single week of active warfare would exhaust every cent of that. Then what? The banks? Banks! They have no money of their own. It is the people's money that lies in their vaults. Charles I of England found it difficult to deal with a parliament that refused to vote him funds. And that was three and a half centuries ago. When Charles tried to defy Parliament he lost his head in a double sense. A modern monarch would lose it quicker.

Germany is discussed here because it is the most powerful nation from a war point of view in Europe. In case of a war the Empire stands ready to mobilize in a day or two 2,000,000 men. In the Franco-Prussian war the cost of each man in active service was $1.50 per day. In the present Russo-Japanese war the cost is put at $2 per day. To put 2,000,000 men in motion would cost $50,000,000, and to keep them in motion would cost $4,000,000 per day. To keep the army for a month would mean $120,000,000. The fleet is still to be taken account of. A war of a month's duration would mean for Germany an expense of $300,000,000. The many millions of Germans at home might endure the waste of so much of the blood of their countrymen. They would not easily endure the expenditure of so much money, for here every man in the empire becomes directly interested. Take money from the banks? That is to take money from the people. It could not be done. Thus the people hold in their own hands the power of peace and war.

A Sobering Effect.

These considerations are producing a very deep effect on the minds of all men. Russia and Japan do not prove the contrary. They prove this very proposition. The cost in money for Russia of Port Arthur is said to have been—$300,000,000. It costs Japan perhaps one-third as much to take the place in direct outlay of money. Japan is on the verge of general bankruptcy at the end of a year of the war with only 500,000 men in the field. Russia is not much better off in a financial sense, although France has lent the Muscovite government hundreds of millions. Russia and Japan will hesitate a long time before they go to war again. It is thirty years since France had a great struggle with Germany at the end of which the country, after defraying the expense of the campaign, had to pay $100,000,000 war indemnity to Germany. France has had enough war for a long time to come.

Other Great Stakes.

Outside of the direct cost of the war take a single important interest whose existence war always threatens. I mean submarine cables. These lines are all the creation of the last fifty years. They rank as the very flower of modern civilization. Their importance to the commerce of the world is incalculable. They have cost vast sums of money. Their importance in case of war is what threatens their existence. In our late war with Spain a cable dispatch was sent to Admiral Cervera telling him that supplies were on the way for his ships. Another was sent ordering him to return with his fleet to Spain. Both failed to reach him. He lost time going out of his way for coal; then ran into Santiago de Cuba and lost his fleet. In case of war it would be an irresistible temptation to a power to destroy the cables likely to be of use to the enemy.

The importance of these cable lines appears through the fact that nearly fifty ships are in constant employ keeping them in repair. England has thirty, France five, the United States four, Denmark three, Germany and Italy two each, Japan and China one each. England has one line across the Pacific which measures nearly 10,000 miles and cost $10,000,000. The German Transatlantic line cost more than half that sum, and the French line nearly as much as the German. Neutralize the cables like the canals? That is an old idea. When the first line was opened in 1858, President Buchanan sent a message to Queen Victoria saying: "Will not all the nations of Christendom unite of their own free will and declare that this cable shall be for ever neutral and its messages sacred by sending them to their destination even in time of war?" And [illegible] that were sent under the sea was the [illegible] to the President: "Peace on earth, good [illegible] Again in 1869 the United States invited [illegible] to a conference the purpose of which was [illegible] of all control by any nation of the use of the [illegible] lines passing through their waters and [illegible] coasts, and to declare that any willful [illegible] cable should be considered an act of piracy. [illegible] to find our government in the forefront [illegible] cause. But it is sad to think that the [illegible] ped there for the last thirty-five years. [illegible] take it up again, and The Hague tribunal [illegible] tion which promises to have power to [illegible] That is only one of the great world [illegible] case of a war breaking out between any two [illegible]

The whole international system of [illegible] must have cost nearly $300,000,000. Their [illegible] estimable, yet their existence is threatened [illegible] every outburst of hostilities.

The Cost of Armed Neutrality.

Nearly every able-bodied young man in [illegible] away from his work for two years' [illegible] army. In Germany the same takes place, [illegible] is for three years. So it is all through [illegible] greater or less degree. There must be close [illegible] men, the flower of humanity, in the best [illegible] life, thus forced into practical idleness [illegible] production of anything of service in life [illegible] Those that remain at home must not only [illegible] the services of this large body of men, [illegible] contribute out of their earnings enough [illegible] armies. Here is an enormous loss.

Then there are new ships to build [illegible] which are costing the nations uncounted [illegible] money. In case of war a single shot may [illegible] istence a fighting machine which costs $5,000,000 [illegible] Those that are not sunk are so badly [illegible] worth less than half their cost. The fine [illegible] after a year's duty off Port Arthur is not [illegible] what it was at the outbreak of the war. [illegible] are another heavy source of expense, and [illegible] siege or campaign they are next to useless, [illegible] dangerous to those who fire them again. [illegible] any end to this thing. Most Beautiful Autumn in All the World is California's.

Where Autumn falls heavily
An inland Autumn fall in Arizona

The other day there drew down through the Cajon and through the great gash of San Gorgonio a wind from off the desert and yet not of the desert. It was a cold wind, a breath drawn from the seared [illegible] of Whitney and the rest of those earth-borne [illegible] that guard the Sierra's eastern flank. Earlier in the summer it might have been a warm wind—if it had lingered long enough above the sand flats in its [illegible]—but now it had forgotten the desert and its [illegible] entirely and it drew down these southern valleys with a load of dust, far-carried, that penetrated everything, filling the air with a dull gray cloud, swaying the tips of the tall gums beneath its breath as does [illegible] wind when, in winter, it breaths a song of [illegible] horns of plenty above the land. It rattled the [illegible] and the late-hung pears and apples to the [illegible] in showers; for the moment it whirled the mus[illegible] forests of the hillsides and the corn-stalks of the [illegible] in mad abandon—and then was gone as suddenly as it had come.

And by this token we who have lived long in this land [illegible] that at last autumn had come—not winter, but [illegible] autumn which extends from October till April and [illegible] central portion of which we are accustomed to [illegible] as winter. We got out our thicker underwear and our heavy coats, and that other part of us put by [illegible] peek-a-boo waists and its little befrilled fixin's with [illegible] a sigh until that same wind, warmed by returning spring, should draw once more down through the [illegible] and San Gorgonio and the rest of the holes in [illegible] mountain wall to lay its mantle over Spring street [illegible] Broadway and Garvanza and Santa Ana and all the [illegible] of the suburbs of this thriving repository for [illegible] River.

By and by, when the days have grown even shorter [illegible] they are now, there will come a wind from off the [illegible] quartering it will strike the hills behind us, and [illegible] will be a rainstorm, one of the kind that puts pink [illegible] the roses and blue into the sky and gold into the [illegible] and green into the wide alfalfa fields of our [illegible]. And if, after this rain, there come another [illegible] out of the north it may possibly be a bit cold in [illegible] of the low valleys along the coast, indeed, it may [illegible] thin sheet of white over the grass and the black [illegible]. But it won't last; some winters there have been [illegible] it doesn't come at all, and the principal function [illegible] short season just at the end of one year and the [illegible] of the next is to restock our hills and our [illegible] with verdure. With the first rains come the [illegible] flowers; it hardly seems that the Great Gardener [illegible] time to pass his hands above their sleeping capsules [illegible] the first green shoots are poking their way through [illegible] soil. The alchemy of brown and green is won[illegible] worked out on the hillsides of the Southwest [illegible] the first rains of the autumnal equinox begin to [illegible] on the sod. Watch it some time and see if any [illegible] tricks of legerdemain you have ever seen, no mat[illegible] well carried out, can compare with it.

[illegible] all the flowers of these same hills confined to [illegible]. Unto each season is given the blossoms [illegible] become it, and what, for instance, could be [illegible] adapted to the setting autumn gives than the [illegible] velvet-hearted sunflowers of every hill road[illegible] what more attractive than the thick clumps of [illegible] that fill in so many of the little crannies [illegible] hills. They seem to redden with the deepening [illegible] as with the growth of summer rosier blush [illegible] that hid among the hills of boyhood. [illegible] the blooming of autumn is not various—but [illegible] appropriate, a sort of much in little, so that you seek longer for the one perfect blossom of its time than you would for a whole handful when spring has scattered its wanton glories over the land's green canvas.

When the winds and rains of autumn come—how much they remind one of that wonderful line of the long ago:

> "Interea magno murmure caelum incipit," for was it not written in a place like to our own sea when the winds of winter rave across it?—not fretful and petulant and moody as is the Atlantic, but strong, powerful, able to do its will in the slow deliberative manner that belongs by rights to this king of seas. Sometimes by night, when the winds do blow, it seems as if they had put the stars all out, and there is no darkness so deep as that which comes when some sobbing wind is striving for the mastery with a peaceful world. Fortunately, such times come but seldom to us fortune-favored of the gods, and when they do come we get all a-flutter and a-tremble at what is an every-day occurrence in places remote from us and whence many of us came.

There is a life, too, of the autumn that is a bit different from that of any other season of the year. The quail, blue-coated and abundant in the hills, are gathered into great bands of varying numbers, seeking ever to save themselves from the guns of hunters. No longer do they come about the foot traveler as they did in March and April and May when eggs and young filled their nests, but scurry at the slightest sound to the thick cover of the most dense scrub. And how they can run amid the brush. They drop from your sight within ten feet of you; two minutes later they rise in thundering flight 200 feet away, just on the crest of some hill, where their first burst of speed will carry them over and down into some thick swale, where two men and a dog could not find a bird any one of them might be so fortunate as to knock over.

Along the beach, where the high tides of this time of year pile up many a bird delicacy from out of the deeps, there is a horde of shore birds and gulls and terns, as well as wanderers like the cormorants and the loons and the pelicans, drawn for the most part from the outlying islands. Here they gather in hundreds, and here they wade, and swim and wander about the surf-beaten beach, the gulls fighting noisily over the crabs and tiny fish the waves cast up, while over them wheel in graceful flight the long-winged terns—those swallows of the sea that drift in with every autumn from the islands to the mainland coast. Apart from these and yet mingling in the life of the sea are the little sparrows of the shore grass plats and the linnets that are everywhere. Inland they may be a pest, but on the edge of the roaring Pacific their chattering song is a pleasant break in the monotony of the breakers' song.

In spring and summer one sees but few of the beach birds, no matter how observant he may be; they are gone, drawn by that mysterious migratory instinct of which we talk so much and know so little, to outlying sandy islands and into the far north, there to rear their young. But the first breath of fall brings them back, and here they stay for the autumn and the brief winter through until once more San Nicolas and Santa Barbara and Anacapa are covered with the lush grasses of real springtime.

California's sun is tempered by the coolest and softest of breezes and her days are akin to those through whose long hours Byron dreamed in Florence and at Marathon. Indeed, one sometimes wonders whether, here on the shores of a new Egean, another band of Hellenes will not yet again build up another Troy, mayhap another Sparta, scattering their Lacedemonian sons to all the quarters of the globe and bringing once more the Golden Age to a Western Greece. And if our days are the acme of hours beautiful what shall I say of the cloudless nights that spread themselves above the green sea? Days of gold and nights of silver, who can say which one they love the better? Not I, but there is a time, just when the sun sinks behind Anacapa and the moon rises above the black wall of the Sierra Madre, that to me seems most glorious of all the day. Two paths, one silver and one pure gold, fall slantingly across the waters, on one rim the world is limmed with light, on the other darkness; you half expect to behold in midair some such conflict as Milton saw. With nerves a-quiver you see the sun sink, inch by inch, into the waiting arms of the sea, higher and higher rises the moon until, all at once and with a great rush, Night lets down her curtain to cover all the world, to await once more gray dawn crying from his precarious foothold above the eastern hills:

"Wake! for the Sun, who scattered into flight
The Stars before him from the Field of Night,
  Drives Night along with them from Heaven, and strikes
The Sultan's Turret with a Shaft of Light."

TWOFOLD EVOLUTION.

Prof. Darwin's address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Cape Town on Tuesday evening, was marked by good taste and was full of suggestion. Progress from the simple and elementary to the complex and highly organized has taken place, both in the animate and inanimate creations. As an astronomer, the speaker has had occasion to study principally the phenomenon in the latter field. He has had reason to note the advance from primeval chaos, the nebula, to the earth as we know it. Man's acquaintance with its form, constituents and history is still limited, but it is possible to recognize some of the important changes which have taken place since its origin. A crust has been formed by cooling, some of the elements have been separated from the others, the surface of the globe has been divided into ocean and continent, and an infinite vareity of popography has resulted from the sculpture of the weather from countless ages. Prof. Darwin could hardly fail spontaneously to observe that the two processes of evolution, of life and of matter, had many points in common, and perceive that in one there might be helpful guides to the student of the other.

The most original part of the teachings of the speaker's father was not the theory of evolution, but that of natural selection. Development from low forms to high ones and the divergence of one species from another through variation having been recognized, the question arose, what influence served to perpetuate some groups of plants and animals and extinguish others. Charles Darwin and Alfred Russell Wallace almost simultaneously hit on the same theory—the doctrine happily designated by Spencer as "The survival of the fittest." Not being a biologist, Prof. George Darwin hardly feels competent to saw how far a modification of that hypothesis has become necessary. Still, even in saying so, he shows that he is aware of the controversies which have been waged over the matter, and which have not yet been finally adjusted. He thinks, however, that in certain ways naturual selection may have operated in the evolution of the material universe. When the full text of his address is available it will be interesting to see how he applies the theory to astronomy and geology.—[New York Tribune.

ELEPHANTS ENDURE COLD.

Writing to the Zoölogisches Garten of Berlin, Prof. Julius Schott states that at a local menagerie he once saw an elephant exposed in the open air to the conditions of a temperature below freezing point, the animal appearing to suffer no inconvenience, though evidently conscious of an unusual environment. But the palm may be given to an Indian elephant named Topsy, the property of a Mr. Philadelphia, a traveling showman. A few years ago, finding himself in Northern Sweden, and the business of his calling at a low ebb, he decided to make for Stroem, a small town almost within the Arctic circle—and attend the annual fair. For the journey of thirty-five miles the animal's body was caparisoned in reindeer skin, and he was provided with boots of the same material. The weather was very cold, the temperature varying from 12 degrees centigrade to 20 degrees centigrade, and snow lay thickly around. The inhabitants of Stroem and the neighboring Lapps were amazed at the unwonted sight. Money poured into the coffers of the enterprising showman, and when the fair was over and the return journey made, the elephant seemed little, if any, the worse for his experience.—[New York Times.

WAYSIDE WANDERINGS IN THE LAND OF WINDMILLS.

By a Special Contributor.

FROM "Merry England" to the historic land of dykes and windmills would seem to be a far cry; but, as a matter of fact, a short voyage of ten hours carries one from the English town of Harwick across the waters of the North Sea to the quays of Rotterdam. We step ashore to enter one of the quaintest cities of the Old World, a city of picturesque architecture, whose homes are built upon piles and whose streets are canals. Curious costumes and interesting features of native life greet us upon every hand. Numberless bridges, countless trees, myriads of strangely fashioned canal boats propelled by men, and huge windmills turning their long arms sleepily, go to make up a picture of city life in the water land which the American visitor is not likely soon to forget.

As we pick our way along the winding streets, from the quay toward the central portion of the town, one of the first things to attract our attention is a dog hiched underneath a small wagon, hauling a pair of handsome, brightly-polished brass milk cans and driven by a peasant woman in wooden shoes and a most remarkable costume.

A Back Street of Volendam

We find, as we travel from place to place, that this is the common means of propulsion of milk carts and vegetable wagons throughout Holland, as many as five or six dogs being sometimes harnessed to one wagon; and it is astonishing to see the faithfulness with which these little fellows bend to their work in the harness.

The clumsy wooden shoes, or sabots, derisively called "kloompers" by the city people, are worn by the peasants universally throughout the Netherlands, and they are also worn to a large extent by the poorer people of the cities, as their cost is small; amounting to only 20 or 30 cents a pair in American money. The costumes of the peasant people, especially those of the Friesland women, to be seen in large numbers in Rotterdam on market days, are exceedingly picturesque, the most remarkable feature being the head dress, which consists of a brightly polished brass cap, fitting closely to the head and covered by a quaintly-fashioned and stiffly-starched lace cap; while upon the forehead and before the ears are suspended huge rings and ornaments of solid gold.

Very often the women wear their entire wealth upon their heads, and the style of the head dress always indicates the town or province from which the wearer comes.

The architecture of Rotterdam is sometimes fantastic as well as picturesque. Owing to the fact that the city is built upon piles, the buildings nearly always lean in one direction or the other, and are seldom plumb. The canals thread most of the principal streets, and each bank is usually adorned with a fine row of trees, but in many cases the houses are built flush to the water's edge for a distance of several blocks, with overhanging balconies and pretty bow windows, giving the city in many places quite the aspect of a Venetian water way. The boats, which are very numerous, are poled along by the brawny boatmen, their huge poles measuring thirty feet in length. The men propel these boats with wonderful swiftness and dexterity, threading their way in and out between buildings, around corners, and under a labyrinth of bridges, passing other boats at every turn, with seldom or never a mishap; yet there is no rudder, and the boat is guided and propelled solely by the long pole in the hands of the boatman.

Wherever draw bridges are necessary, the bridge tenders collect their toll of the boatmen in a wooden shoe, which is suspended by a line at the end of a fish pole.

The windmills, which are an ever-present feature of every Dutch landscape, are used for all manner of purposes: for sawing lumber, pumping water, grinding flour and feed, and very largely in the manufacture of linseed oil and its substitutes. A tour of inspection through one of the great mills is an exceedingly interesting experience. One cannot fail to be impressed with their great size, though the distant view of the Dutch windmill conveys the idea that it is simply a toy.

In the round tower of an ordinary wheat-grinding windmill such as are commonly seen in all Dutch cities, are generally living apartments for two families, a stable for the mill wagons, extensive storerooms, and the entire machinery for grinding and bolting 100 bags of flour a day. The arrangement of the machinery is most interesting—a system of huge wooden cog wheels being generally employed. Many of these mills are three or four hundred years old and have been grinding away steadily ever since the days when Holland was a province of Spain. The view from the platform encircling the top of the tower is well worth climbing the many steps to see, and it is only as you stand close under the huge wheel, with its mighty beams of oak and iron covered with sailcloth, that you realize its real magnitude. From tip to tip of the great arms the distance is 100 feet, and the height from the ground to the top of the tower is 120 feet, the sweep of the great sails going nearly fifty feet higher still.

The picturesque little town of Zaandam is remarkable for the great number of its windmills, most of which are used for grinding out oil from flax, mustard and rape seed. The machinery used for crushing the seed and pressing out the oil is quite remarkable, some of the great stone wheels weighing several tons apiece. There are hundreds of these windmills in and around Zaandam, and some of them are always in sight; look whichever way you will, a dozen or twenty mills greet your eye, reaching out their long arms solemnly to the winds of the Zuider Zee. We took a long walk out on the dyke at Zaandam, and at one point counted fifty-three windmills visible at once. It was at Zaandam that Peter the Great learned [illegible] there we may still see the little cottage [illegible] lived like a Dutch peasant.

The Dutch method of horseshoeing, to be [illegible] in every city, is decidedly novel. The horse [illegible] hitched between two upright posts, and [illegible] hoof is fastened to a horizontal iron bar, [illegible] possible for the animal to kick.

Travel in Holland, either by railway or by [illegible] going canal boats, is interesting at all times, [illegible] an unusual and varying landscape, with [illegible] strange sights continually presenting themselves [illegible] view.

Holland is a nation without fences and [illegible] —the canals serving for both. Canals [illegible] sion line between fields, farms and provinces [illegible] canals are highways upon which the Dutch [illegible] gathers in his crops and brings them, [illegible] to his very back door; and upon this highway [illegible] carries his produce to market. The boats are either towed or poled [illegible] men, but in the open country sails are very [illegible] and it is an interesting sight, as you travel [illegible] the country, to see scores of great sailing [illegible] ing along, apparently, on the dry land, for [illegible] are invisible at a short distance. is one of the most interesting villages of It is a fishing town of about three thousand on the shores of the Zuider Zee, and has no railway or other communication with the prosaic outer world, except by canal boat from Edam. The town consists principally of one long street, built almost entirely on top of the great dyke which keeps the waters of the Zuider Zee from overflowing Holland. The houses are queer little steep-gabled and red-tiled structures, usually consisting of but one room in which the entire family of father, mother and ten or a dozen children live, eat and sleep. In this room they are born and in this room they die. The beds, like Dutch beds generally, are really cupboards set in the walls, with steps to climb up to them. The parents sleep on the top shelf, and the children stow themselves below. The styles never change in Volendam, and the Sunday finery of its women is handed down from mother to daughter for generations. Volendam costumes are famous in the world of art and are even more remarkable than those of the fisher folk of "Eiland Marken."

The trousers of the men are, if possible, just a little wider than the grotesque affairs of the Marken fishermen, while the women wear upon their heads a white lace cap with stiffly starched horns projecting nearly a foot on each side of the head. The little girls are dressed exactly like their mothers and are very quaint little bodies indeed. One can usually tell the number of persons in each house by counting the long rows of wooden shoes outside the door, for all persons, upon entering a house, men, women and children alike, leave their shoes upon the threshold.

Many strange customs prevail in Volendam. For instance, a citizen of that interesting village is obliged to pay an annual tax of two guilders and a half upon every one of his unmarried daughters over twenty years of age; and he is also taxed if he has more than one chimney upon his house. When a young fisherman of Volendam goes to pay court to the "meisjle" of his choice, he first looks at the palms of her hands. If they show signs of hard work, he knows that she will make a good wife, and he propounds the momentous question without delay. Volendam is quite unspoiled by contact with the outside world, for strangers seldom find their way there. A few artists come, each year, to transfer the quaint costumes and the picturesque interiors of the cottages to canvas, but aside from this, the quiet life of the fishing village is quite undisturbed; and it is as characteristic a bit of primitive shore life as one could wish to see.

Volendam is a Catholic village, whereas most of the towns of Holland are Protestant. The people are intensely religious, and every fisherman who sails out of Volendam on Monday morning is sure to sail back again on the Saturday, if the winds do not fail him, in order that he may worship in the old Parish church on the Sabbath day.

It is a pretty sight to stand on the dyke in Volendam, on a fine Saturday, and watch the many fishing boats with sails widespread, all making for the home port to spend the Sabbath. Some of the sails are mere specks on the horizon, and scores of others are rounding the nearest points of land and beating into the little harbor, until by nightfall nearly all of the fleet of 300 vessels is safely warped into the tight little harbor, and the streets are filled with the men; great, hearty fellows in red jackets and wide blue trousers, liberally decorated with tremendous saucer-like brass and silver buttons.

The streets, on a Sabbath morning, present a most interesting sight, thronged with the fishermen and their families on their way to the Parish church, attired in all the splendor of carefully brushed fur caps and red vests; the women in gaily colored shoulder shawls, lace helmets and buckled bodices. The feminine members of the congregation sit apart in a portion of the church reserved for them, and look like so many Sisters of Mercy in their snow-white, wide-winged caps of lace.

Each of the towns of Holland possesses its own peculiar charm—the Venice-like canals of Rotterdam; the dainty blue porcelains of Delft; the army of long-armed windmills at Zaandam; the parklike streets and fine old royal palace of The Hague; the paradise of dairy farms at Purmerend and Broek, in Waterland; the picturesque cheese market of Edam; the quaint costumes and the fishing fleets of Volendam and the island of Marken; and the historic associations of Alkmar, carrying us back through the centuries to her heroic part in the struggle of Holland when she shook off the yoke of Spain in 1573. These are but a few of the fascinating things to carry away with us as undying memories of this wonderful Water Kingdom.

Often, since leaving her hospitable shores, do we wander back in fancy to that land of the picturesque, and to the things which mark it as unique in the sisterhood of nations; to its dykes and its armies of windmills; to its countless canals and waterways; to its hyacinth and tulip fields; to its long rows of steep-gabled houses, leaning this way and that, like a band of tipsy sailors; to its long aisles of willows and lime trees, planted with mathematical precision; to its red-tiled cottages and its blanketed cattle, cropping the crisp green grass or chewing their cuds contentedly; to the helmet caps and the clumsy "kloompers" of the rosy-cheeked children; to the great brass milk cans and the dog-drawn wagons; to its ancient castles, towers and belfries; to the carillons chimed from the steeples at every hour—and all this beneath a gray-blue sky of infinite softness. Quaint, lovely Holland! What a priceless heritage of pleasant memories to treasure through the coming years!

CARE OF CABLES.

GREAT LABOR NECESSARY TO CARE FOR SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH WIRES.

[London News:] The difficulty attending the efficient maintenance of the network of submarine telegraph cables, by which intelligence is flashed to the uttermost ends of the earth, is illustrated by the reports in the newspapers that no fewer than six of these cables were damaged by the typhoon which a few days ago raged over the East China seas.

The various cable companies are, of course, prepared for contingencies of this kind, and a fleet of some forty-six specially-constructed vessels are constantly employed in laying and repairing cables in different parts of the world.

The magnitude of these operations may be realized when it is said that the length of cable lying along the bed of the ocean is something like 225,000 miles. Of these considerably more than one-half are British, while British messages number 100,000,000 words per annum. The cables lie at various depths, the greatest known depth of the ocean being 5.68 miles in the North Pacific.

"Our cables are tested every week," said an official of the Eastern Telegraph Company to a representative of the Daily News, "and when a fault is detected a repairing ship is sent to the spot. These ships are stationed at various centers, such as Gibraltar, Aden, Singapore, and the west and east coasts of Africa, and there is always a reserve stock of cable kept in tanks at certain stations.

"In shallow water the cables are sometimes fouled by the anchors of ships, and at the mouths of large rivers there is sometimes trouble when trunks of trees and other objects are swept into the sea and forced by the strong currents against the cables. Then there are boring insects like the teredo, which bores its way between the strands of iron wire twisted round the core of the cable, but in our newer cables we have provided against the depredations of the teredo by a sheathing of brass coiled round the cable like a ribbon.

"Storms frequently cause damage to cables by straining them and causing them to sag against the sharp edges of rocks, especially where they are stretched across a depression in the bed of the sea. As you may know, the bottom of the sea has its hills and valleys just as on dry land. The cables are made of various thicknesses, according to the position for which they are intended.

"What is the life of a cable? It is difficult to say, but we have many cables which were laid down in 1870. Disturbing an old cable is sometimes a delicate operation. When the cable is brought to the surface it is encrusted with coral, sponge, and many other things. Needless to say, great care has to be taken to fish up the right cable at points near the shore, where many cables converge.

"The cost of a cable varies between £120 and £200 per nautical mile. It is composed of a copper core, through which the current is conducted, surrounded by insulating material. Then comes an armor of iron wire twisted round the inner part of the cable, and an outer covering of hemp. It is made at Chorlton by the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company.

"We have a staff of about 2000 persons. Our students are admitted after a careful medical examination, and spend nine months at Electra House, Finsbury Pavement, after which they go to the submarine telegraph school at Porthcurnow, in Cornwall, for fifteen months. They are then sent to various telegraph stations abroad. At some of them, on islands like Cocos-Keeling, in the Indian Ocean, for instance, they have a Robinson Crusoe sort of life.

"The messages are transmitted more quickly by being repeated at intermediate stations. To Shanghai there would be about seven repeats, at Gibraltar, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Madras, Singapore, and Hongkong respectively. The time taken would be from two to two and a half hours. Priority is given to government messages.

"There are eight languages recognized by international agreement. They are German, English, Spanish, French, Dutch, Italian, Portuguese and Latin. It is not necessary for the telegraphists to know all these languages, but, of course, a knowledge of French, the international language, is of great use."

ROMANS FIXED THE GAUGE.

The ancient Romans made the standard gauge of our present railways. The width of the wheel base of the most up-to-date dining car is what it is because it was originally that of the chariots which rolled about the Roman roads in Britain. A recent speaker upon the subject at Newcastle has put the matter beyond theory. He said that many years ago he had known an old gentleman who, in his youth, had been associated with Stephenson. This old gentleman had told him that he had asked the great engineer why he had adopted the still existing gauge, and Stephenson had explained that he found it was the width between the ruts in the roads along the Roman wall and that he thought that if a world power like Rome had found that gauge the most effective he could not do better than adopt it also.—[Pearson's Weekly.

The London correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal writes that "few people are aware that the original of 'Little Dorrit' is still living. She is now 92 years of age, but still active, and of all things in the long life that lies behind her is proudest of the honor conferred upon her by Charles Dickens. Mrs. Mary Ann Cooper is her name, but in her maiden days, when she first became acquainted with Dickens, she was a Miss Mitton. Her father lived at Sunbury, some eighteen miles from London, and Dickens was a frequent visitor there. He bestowed the nickname of 'Little Dorrit' on Miss Mitton, and in 1855 told her that he was going to write another book which he intended to call 'Little Dorrit' and that he should put her name in it."

Around the World.

BOMBAY, INDIA, AS SEEN BY TWO AMERICAN WOMEN.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE is necessarily some confusion attending the arrival of a steamer in any port, but in India it is like pandemonium. Such running and crowding and jostling and shouting! Each person has to assort his own luggage, and keep a watchful eye on the numerous coolies who force their services upon him. Then it must pass the customs examination, which, to our surprise, is very thorough; not even the watch one is wearing, nor the kodak in use is exempt from taxation. Then comes the weighty responsibility of choosing a hotel. It is a momentous question to decide, and no matter what your decision is, you are sure to regret your choice.

In the beautiful city of Bombay, with its palatial dwellings and magnificent public buildings, there is not a single hotel that is not uncomfortable, unsanitary and uninviting. Indeed, it is said that in no other city in the world are the hotels so uniformly bad, unless it be Calcutta. At the "Great Eastern Hotel" in that place my bathtub was the half of a hogshead, the contents of which were dumped on the zinc-covered floor and allowed to trickle down the sides of the house through an opening in the wall where a brick had been removed. Most of the beds throughout India are devoid of springs, and the unyielding character of the mattresses is not conducive to restful slumber, though it is claimed to be a cool arrangement. The service is very poor, and one is greatly dependent upon one's own personal attendants—indeed, some hotels display notices warning the guests that the management does not guarantee to furnish service. The food is badly prepared, as a rule, and the mystery surrounding the made dishes renders them quite unappetizing. Buffalo butter, a bluish-white paste, is the only kind to be had, but the fruits of all kinds are plentiful and delicious. Flowers are used profusely in table decoration, but the arrangement is quite inconsistent with occidental ideas of grace and beauty. The stems are removed, the blossoms dissected, and the green leaves are chopped into small particles. This material is arranged on the table cloth in conventional designs of the most intricate patterns. One experiences a shock at first sight of such floral mutilation, but regards it more indulgently after a time, for it is so delightfully Indian.

Two things are absolutely indispensable to the tourist in India, and both should be acquired if possible, on the day of arrival. One is a cork helmet, more comfortable than becoming, and a necessary protection from the piercing rays of a tropical sun. The other is a traveling servant, known variously as "bearer," "butler" and "boy." No matter how old he may be, nor what his parents gave him for a name, he is addressed by one of these titles. He sleeps on a mat outside your door, and is available at any hour of the day or night to run errands, or attend to any of your wants. He serves you in the dining-room at hotels, or when you are a guest in private houses. When you are sightseeing, he rides on the coachman's box, and acts as guide and interpreter, carries your parasol, fan or wraps. In traveling, he buys your railway tickets, makes your beds, arranges your luggage, and then seeks accommodation in a third-class compartment, until his services are needed. He has it in his power to make your life miserable or blissful, therefore great care should be exercised in choosing a bearer. He comes to you with a budget of letters of recommendation—his stock in trade. Few of them can read the letters they prize so highly, and thus they remain in ignorance of the contents, which is often anything but complimentary. Frequently some victim writes: "Beware of this boy. He is the biggest thief and liar I ever had in my service," etc., etc. It is amusing to see his smile of satisfaction as he presents it for your perusal, and his look of wonder and disappointment when you decline his services. As dishonesty, lying and intemperance are the chief characteristics of the traveling servant, we felt we were fortunate in getting a boy who was recommended by some native friends in whose employ he had been for years. He entered into a rigid agreement that he would be sober and obedient while in our service. Then our friend required him to deliver into our keeping all of his letters. "While you hold these," he said, "you may be sure of faithful and obedient service, without fear of being deserted in the interior where you will be unable to procure another English-speaking servant." We appreciated the wisdom of this arrangement many a time, when we saw how some of our fellow-travelers were treated who had been less cautious.

Daniel Lazarus was not a romantic name, nor was the owner of it a beauty, but as a servant he was without a peer. A Madrasse by birth, he was a Christian, as are most of the natives of that part of India, and this was a great advantage to us in many ways. He spoke English well, and was a most accomplished waiter. He had a quick wit, and keen native intelligence, but his knowledge of the outside world was most limited. He was assisting me one day in printing some photographs of European views, and displayed a great interest in them. He was puzzled at seeing only white people in the picture, and when I explained to him that there were no black men in Europe, he looked dubious, and remarked: "But who are the servants, Memsahib?" When I told him that in Venice there was water several feet deep in all the streets, an incredulous smile passed over his countenance as he said: "Ah, Memsahib, the water would come up in the bungalows if that were the case."

He could not write his own name, nor did he know one figure from another, yet he could calculate with the rapidity of a cashier, and he could carry in his mind every anna that he paid out for us during the day. At night he would go to one of the numerous professional scribes, and have an itemized account of the day's expenditures put on paper to be submitted to us, and these always balanced with the greatest accuracy. Our boy was peculiarly successful in dispersing the hordes of beggars who would swarm around the carriage whenever we stopped. The Indian mendicants are even more importunate than the Italian variety, and in many ways are particularly offensive. A great many are so emaciated by famine as to be merely living skeletons, others display arms or legs half-destroyed by leprosy, and if you deny these the alms they beg, they are likely to touch you with the infected member. A popular scheme with some, especially children, is to feign blindness by turning the eyeballs wrong side out. I was sitting alone in a carriage one day, when two small children, clad in their native nothingness, approached me. The elder, a girl of perhaps nine years, was leading a little boy of not more than three, who was apparently totally blind. They put up a piteous appeal, indicating their hunger by patting their little brown stomachs and pointing to their mouths, and repeating an incessant "Memsahib, Memsahib!" I sat so still that the little actor must have thought I had gone away, or was curious to see what was happening, for suddenly two large brown eyes looked straight into mine, and for one second gazed at me in baby embarrassment, then they were quickly rolled back again.

If one only visited Bombay, it would repay one for a trip to India. Situated on an island eleven and one-half miles long, and from three to four miles wide, it has a population of nearly 900,000. Most of this is crowded into an area of about four square miles. There are beautiful drives in all directions, the most attractive being along the bay of Malabar Point, about four miles distant. On Malabar Hill are situated most of the foreign residences, as this is the highest and healthiest part of the city, and wealth and nature have combined to make this one of the most beautiful suburbs in the world. From many points on the hill one has a fine view of the harbor, which is most interesting, crowded with vessels of all nations, and the picturesque native small craft. The public buildings in Bombay are superb, and are so arranged that they appear to the best advantage, and are exceedingly ornamental to the city. The Victoria Railway station is an immense stone structure elaborately ornamented with sculpture. The structure is Italian Gothic in style with ornamental modifications, and was built at a cost of $1,500,000.

One does not care to linger at the Pinjra Pol, or infirmary for animals, though it is worthy of a visit. It is a curious sight to behold the large number of diseased goats and sheep, aged cows, crippled horses and mangy dogs that are the inmates of th[illegible] tion, which covers several acres, and is [illegible] the voluntary contributions of [illegible] veneration of animal life prompts this [illegible]

The traveler should not fail to visit [illegible] Market, which at about 5 o'clock in the [illegible] sents a most interesting spectacle. [illegible] was an attractive array of unfamiliar fruits, [illegible] vited investigation, and soon our bearers had [illegible] heaped with specimens of them all. In another [illegible] were cages of monkeys and gay-feathered birds, [illegible] little green parrots were offered for sale at [illegible] cents.

When we came to the beef market, our boy, [illegible] Christian, accompanied us through it, but our [illegible] servant, a Hindu, to whom the cow is the [illegible] of animals, could not cross the threshold [illegible] defiled, so he went around and met us at another [illegible]

To enjoy a drive in India, one should go [illegible] sun is up, for even its first rays in midwinter [illegible] ing. He is an attractive, [illegible] visitor, but one that bears watching, or this [illegible] pilfering fowl is likely to depart with some of [illegible] toilet articles or bits of jewelry. His name is [illegible] and the banyan trees outside your window are [illegible] bristling with this noisy tribe.

As you go forth in the early morning, you pass [illegible] less rows of human beings sleeping on the [illegible] of the sidewalks. There they lie, shoulder to [illegible] an army of paupers, with only the stone pavement [illegible] bed, and no roof save the vault of heaven. Slowly [illegible] rise and begin their simple toilets. With their [illegible] brass jars which have been filled at a public [illegible] they perform their morning ablutions, and with a [illegible] stick that serves as toothbrush they go through [illegible] most elaborate dental operations. Some are [illegible] their dark brown bodies rubbed with cocoanut [illegible] they shine like satin; others sitting on their [illegible] are being shaved by barbers who squat before [illegible] and in this position perform their tonsorial [illegible] As a sign of mourning for a near relative the [illegible] head is kept shaved for several months.

In the late afternoon one goes for another drive [illegible] whole populace seems to be out for an airing, [illegible] sunset they turn with one accord toward the [illegible] Bunda, where a military band plays in the public [illegible] This attractive promenade is not named after the [illegible] god as the name would suggest, but is a corruption [illegible] the Indian word pallow, fish, into Apollo. It was [illegible] inally the Indian fish market, but now is a [illegible] quay, with fascinating shops and splendid public [illegible] ings, and is the most popular rendezvous of the [illegible] and fashion of Bombay. Here is the finest [illegible] in the city, where one may dine on broad verandas [illegible] enjoy a charming view of the harbor and the [illegible] well as the square, which presents a gay and [illegible] scene.

One delightful morning was spent at the [illegible] Congregational Mission, where Mr. and Mrs. Hume [illegible] have lived in India for many years, are carrying [illegible] noble work. Through the long, torrid summers when [illegible] missionaries are seeking health and comfort [illegible] mountains, these tireless workers stay at their [illegible] and when famine and pestilence sweep over the [illegible] they gather in the children whose parents have [illegible] in the epidemic, and are themselves dying from [illegible] tion or disease, and with their own hands [illegible] to their needs, nurse them back to health, give [illegible] home, and bring them up to be useful men and [illegible] who in turn assist in nursing and teaching [illegible] fortunate little ones. In this way they had, [illegible] previous summer, rescued 300 little boys and [illegible] many girls, who were left to die in the streets [illegible] famine, cholera and plague. One bright-faced [illegible] little fellow was pointed out to me as having been [illegible] in the gutter, apparently dead, and on the point [illegible] ing devoured by a pariah dog, when rescued by [illegible] benefactors.

In the girls' school, after their studies are [illegible] Mrs. Hume teaches them embroidery and plain [illegible] They make their own clothes, and such as are [illegible] by the little boys, which, though limited, is [illegible] than they are accustomed to, and they appear [illegible] comfortable in the ill-fitting garments [illegible] are forced to wear.

As we passed through the compound we [illegible] watch a number of small boys who were [illegible] gymnastic exercises with a native instructor, [illegible] seemed to be enjoying it thoroughly.

When King Edward ascended the throne he [illegible] Mr. Hume, in acknowledgment of his faithful [illegible] to the Indians. This was an honor rarely [illegible] upon Americans, but it was well placed, for [illegible] man is perhaps the most honored, respected [illegible] citizen of Bombay, and when his work on [illegible] ished, it can truly be said of him, "Well [illegible] good and faithful servant." "The hawks will take away the chickens!"
"No, they won't take them away!"
"Yes, they'll take away the chickens!"
"If they do, I'm going, too!"

Innocenta stood under the passion vine that roofed the long portico across the front of the Aguilar hacienda, and swept her glance over the hills and valleys that stretched from the mountains up there to the hazy line that marked the ocean front. Here and there, dark spots moving lazily over the landscape marked the [illegible] that fed on the sun-roasted pastures. The voices of the Indian children, playing under the willows in the [illegible] below the house, sifted faintly through the silence. No other sign of life answered the eager impulse toward action—toward sensation of some sort—that showed in the girl's face. Within, all was dead also. [illegible] slept noisily on his couch in the patio, and the [illegible] drowsed or snored about him; even Tia Maria had for once relaxed her vigilance and retired to her own [illegible] for her siesta. Perhaps it was the unwonted sense of freedom from watchful eyes that stirred in the girl.

A swirl of dust far beyond the big sycamore caught her eye. Gradually it became a white cloud, and as it approached it resolved itself into a horse and rider, moving rapidly in spite of the fierce noontide heat. The girl stepped back so that she was partly screened by the [illegible] as the handsome face of the rider became clear. It was Bartoloméo Smith, she knew—the despised of her aunt. But no sharp voice sounded a warning, and Innocenta stood still.

The young man checked his horse and set it to sidestepping across the road, when he saw the pretty face re[illegible] by the screening leaves. At the nearest point of [illegible], he swept the ground with his sombrero in a [illegible]. Little Innocenta smiled in delight, and quite in[illegible] lifted a dainty hand. Then, quick as a flash, she tucked the hand behind her and glanced over her shoulder with a roguish smile. The smile changed to consternation, for there behind her, looming very large and very dark in her white gown, stood her aunt.

"What is this?" Señora Aguilar demanded, "you, an Aguilar, smiling on that monkey-man!"

"He is the finest man I have seen in the north," the [illegible] declared.

"You dare tell me that! That dissipated gringo—the son of an Americano!"

"He is also the son of Inez Ortega," Innocenta reminded her.

"The fool Inez was to marry a foreigner! And a man named 'Smeeth!'" The señora fairly choked in her contempt for the plebeian name.

"He is a bad man, too," she continued, dropping heavily into her chair; "I tell you this, Innocenta, he is a bad man. He has stolen leagues of land and thousands of cattle and horses from thy uncle! And the son is no better than the father. And yet you smile upon him. What would thy sainted mother say to see thee smiling and [illegible] a strange man, and an enemy of thy family at that! It is well she is in her grave. And now," her [illegible] tone grew grave, "I warn thee. Thy uncle and I have naught to do with the house of the gringo. And thou must never know or speak with the son. See thou [illegible]"

But the girl had no need to heed the warning. In the days that followed, Tia Maria herself saw to it that her charge had no opportunity to cultivate the acquaintance of Bartoloméo Smith.

When the pad of hoof beats was heard on the road, Señora Aguilar was on the alert. If Innocenta was out of sight a sharp call drew her within. If she sat upon the portico, her duenna hovered portentously near. No hen ever more vigorously warded off a hawk circling above her one chick.

Sometimes the girl sat with down-dropped lids, and with a tilt of the head so suggestive of defiance that Bartoloméo took courage as he passed by. Sometimes she gazed at the blue ocean rim, and horse and rider were [illegible] invisible, though they passed directly through her line of vision. Then Don Bartoloméo swore. Sometimes again, in spite of the frowns of her aunt, she let her eyes meet his and speak the language that is as old as man and woman. Then the youth was happy.

But Tia Maria was not omnipotent, for all her watchfulness. One morning Innocenta started up, crying: "I [illegible] to light the candle to San Antonio, and it is his day! I must do it at once;" and she hastened away. In her own room, after the candle was set before the little shrine, she opened her heavy shutters and looked out.

Don Bartoloméo, in his almost daily passing to and from Los Angeles, always scanned "la casa de Aguilar" with an eye that took in every detail. Today he saw the [illegible] in the shutter and the bright eyes behind it. He bowed low and tossed a kiss—toward the shutter. A moment later, Innocenta picked up her sewing from the floor and sat demurely down to stitch happy [illegible] into her handkerchief—and all this quite unseen by the Señora's "hawk eyes."

Some days later, as Señora Aguilar sat alone upon the portico, the son of the gringo rode boldly into the yard, [illegible] a polite salute, spoke:

"Señora, why do you so scorn me? I have done thee [illegible], and I would gladly be friends with thee and [illegible] it might be permitted."

[illegible] of his mother could have made no greater concession, but Señora Aguilar gazed calmly over his head, [illegible] recognition of his presence, much less of his [illegible]. Mortified and angry, the youth swung into his [illegible] and dashed away—with oaths to San Pedro and San Antonio that he would yet win his suit. But after that, in his daily passing, he caught only glimpses of a vanishing skirt or braid of hair. Innocenta no more sat upon the portico, even with a guardian on either side of her.

The arrival of a trading vessel in San Pedro Harbor had been long and impatiently awaited. The señora felt that the wardrobe which her niece had brought with her from San Diego was quite unfitted to the needs of the heiress of the Aguilar estates. Indeed, it was not suitable for so great an occasion as a shopping expedition, she decided, when the news of the anchorage of a vessel in the bay finally came. So, with many warnings and commands, Innocenta was left in charge of Patronilla, the old Indian housekeeper, while her uncle and aunt set forth for the vessel.

Don Bartoloméo, on his daily round of the herds, viewed the passage of the Aguilar train. An hour later he was pacing his horse back and forth in front of the Aguilar hacienda. No glimpse of bright eyes or beckoning hand rewarded him. At last he rode around the house and drew rein before the patio entrance. There he saw Innocenta half-reclining on a bench, the tears still sparkling on the round cheek, the sobs still quivering on the soft lips. Before he could dismount, Patronilla uttered a shrill hiss. In an instant the dogs were at his horse, nose and heels, and the animal was plunging wildly to escape its tormentors. While Bartoloméo lashed off the beasts, the faithful old servant half dragged, half pushed the girl inside the house. But as the door slammed to, he had one sight of an appealing face and an uplifted hand, and he rode away satisfied with his escapade.

The new gowns were ready for "La Noche Buena," which all the world was to celebrate that year at la Casa Dominguez. On the way thither, Señora Aguilar delivered herself of another warning:

"Because of Inez, el gringo and his loco son will be there; no Aguilar will stoop to insult the hospitality of a compadre; but neither will we degrade ourselves by recognizing an enemy. Thou—art an Aguilar."

"Si," the child murmured, with head held high.

Her gown was of the blueness of the California sky, and her dainty grace bewitched the young caballeros who watched her dance. When he took her little hand in his own, Bartoloméo Smith felt new pulses throb; but her hand was cool, and her eyes lifted not to the enemy of her house. It was not until the last wild strains of "El Sombrero Blanco" rang through the room and he, with hat held high over her head, bent low and kissed her hand, that her startled, betraying eyes met his ardent gaze.

That glance more fully determined the son of the Americano, who had inherited Yankee persistency along with the eyes and the grace of his mother. A few days later, father and son rode together into the court of the Aguilars, and the father spoke to Señor Aguilar:

"We have had differences, Señor; we both believe that we are right—perhaps we are both wrong. But that is neither here nor there. My son has come to ask the hand of your niece. He has lands and gold, as you know; he asks naught but the girl. What say you?"

"I say," answered the old man, "that no woman of my blood marries the son of a thief and a liar!"

The American sprang from his horse in a fury; but his son checked him and drew him away, while Señora Aguilar restrained her husband. And Innocenta, who had heard it all behind her closed shutters, knelt before her little shrine and wept.

The Aguilars considered the courtship of Bartoloméo Smith a closed incident now. Not so young Smith. He made plans.

The wedding of Anita Oliveras and Juan Luis Lugo, both related to the Aguilars and the Ortegas and half the families in the country beside, was to take place in March. The marriage ceremony was to be performed in the new Church of the Angels, in Los Angeles, and the Fiesta de Boda was to take place in "El Palacio," across the plaza.

Bartoloméo stood near the church door on the day of the wedding, when Innocenta, walking between her aunt and uncle, approached. Her eyes met his for one instant, and she flushed and paled. After that he ignored the presence of the Aguilars as studiously as they avoided him. When the dancing began he passed Innocenta by with no sign of recognition, and her heart ached, though she danced more gaily than ever. It was well into the night when the merry crowd began to dance "Las Pollitas." The gay voices rang out more and more recklessly, dancers moved more and more rapidly, and the onlookers crowded more closely about the revelers. In the confusion Innocenta found herself in the arms of a new partner, and looked up to meet Bartoloméo's eyes. "I love thee, sweetheart," he whispered under cover of the song. Another change, and again their hands met and their pulses throbbed together. "Wilt thou be my bride? Quick! Speak, dear one."

She looked up, and he read the answer that seals a woman's fate in her eyes.

"Come," he went on, as the singers loudly challenged the hawks outside; "come, Padre Pedro waits us in the church. Juan and Anita will go with us. It is but a moment, and thou shalt be my wife, and none can come between us. Come!"

The dancers swung and changed so rapidly that Tia Maria, whose eyes were growing heavy, caught only now and then a glimpse of her charge. She did not see when Juan, the bridegroom, whisked little Innocenta out of the back door. Glad, yet terrified, the girl yielded herself to the guiding hand of yesterday's bride, and the four ran hastily across the deserted yard and the moonlit Plaza, and through the dark garden, into the rear door of the church. There, in the dim light of a single candle, the priest awaited them.

"I promised thy mother to look to thy welfare, daughter," the old man said, as he blessed the trembling bride. "I know that Bartoloméo here is a good boy and a loyal son of the church. And thy aunt and uncle Aguilar are sometimes unreasonable in their prejudices, therefore——" And the solemn words of the marriage service were repeated once more.

SOME FAMOUS BELLS.

Chimes in Philadelphia That Have Proclaimed Great Events.

[Leslie's Weekly:] There is a bell at Washington, D. C., whose history dates back to the beginning of modern civilization on this continent. It is a trifling affair as regards size, its dimensions being only 8x6½ inches, yet its notes have sounded to call the great discoverer Columbus to prayer and worship. It was brought from Spain in December, 1493, and set up in a church at Santo Domingo. It was the special gift of King Ferdinand, and bears the initial of his name, "F," in old Gothic characters upon its surface. When La Vega, the new City of the Plains, was founded, church and bell were bodily removed to it.

Among the largest and most complete chimes in the United States is the one hanging in the bell tower of Holy Trinity church, Philadelphia. Most chimes are made up of from eight to a dozen bells. The one at Holy Trinity, however, is composed of no less than twenty-five of the bronze-throated musical instruments. These are hung upon horizontal bars located one above the other, the first holding seven, the next five, the next seven, and the next three, while three others, two large and one small one, swing from an independent frame situated higher up in the belfry. Christ Church, Philadelphia, also has an interesting set of bells. They are more than a century and a half old. They have welcomed many a famous visitor to that town, so rich in American memories and traditions. In 1774 they rang for the last time on the birthday of the King of England, and July 4, 1776, together with the old bell in Liberty Hall, they patriotically proclaimed "liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

The bell in the steeple of the First Baptist Church at Providence, R. I., the church organized, as tradition says, in 1639 by Roger Williams, was cast in London about the year 1775. It first bore this inscription: "For freedom of conscience the town was first planted. Persuasion, not force, was used by the people." In 1787 the bell was broken and had to be recast. It was then made to bear this inscription: "This church was formed A.D. 1639, the first in the State, and the oldest of the Baptists in America." It was recast again in March, and also in September, of the year 1844. It now bears the inscription: "This church was founded in 1639 by Roger Williams, its first pastor, and the first asserter of liberty of conscience."

HOW JUSTICE MISSED HIM.

The late Capt. "Joe" Nicholson, to memory dear in Detroit, used to tell of a long time prisoner who had been in the house of correction while the captain ran that institution.

Just before his term expired the convict called the captain and told him that justice was now done and that an honest man would start fresh in the world.

"But you have told me several times that you were innocent of the charge on which you were sent here."

"So I was, Capt. Joe, and I can prove it. Here are the names of three witnesses. Get their statement and see whether I'm lying."

Just as a matter of curiosity the captain complied and found convincing evidence of the man's innocence.

The convict was called in and indignantly asked why he had not used his evidence in getting a new trial.

"I'll tell you, captain. In my time I was acquitted three or four times when I was guilty, so when I was convicted of something I never did I just thought I'd even things up by taking my medicine without kicking. Besides that, it sort of tickled me to find that justice had missed me at every shot."—[Detroit Journal.

EXPENSIVE UMBRELLAS.

"Fewer persons may carry umbrellas now than formerly," said J. T. Lucas of Baltimore at the Hotel Baltimore, "but they are certainly carrying more expensive ones." Mr. Lucas is a traveling salesman for an umbrella factory.

"It is hard to believe that a person would pay $1000 for an umbrella, but I have had several orders of that amount. We had one for Tiffany last year. It seems difficult to figure where the cost comes in, but it is all in the handle, which is rich in jewels. First we take an ivory tusk which is brought direct from India. It may be two feet long in its crude state, and it is polished and worked over, this feature sometimes taking a month. Then it is studded with diamonds or some other jewel. I took orders in Kansas City today for umbrellas costing $200.

"I will concede, however, that the raincoat is cutting down the number of men's umbrellas used."—[Kansas City Star.

HOW THE BISHOP ESCAPED.

The late Bishop Williams of the Episcopal diocese of Connecticut was a confirmed bachelor, and held a deep rooted antipathy for becoming entangled in Cupid's net. One afternoon he was visited by a rather effusive maiden lady of his acquaintance, who was also his ardent admirer.

"Well, Bishop," she remarked, after some unimportant preliminary skirmishing, "I have had a vision from the Lord that you and I are to be married."

The bishop looked at her, overcome with consternation and amazement at her presumption. But only for a short time was he at loss; then, his wit coming to the rescue, he replied:

"Wait a moment, madam; I haven't had my vision yet."—[Boston Herald.

The Haunts of Burns.

RELICS AND REMINDERS OF A SELF-CONTRADICTORY LIFE.

By a Special Contributor.

IT was with eager interest that a sunburned Australian, a bonnie Scotch lassie, and a "nutmeg" Yankee, formed a triangular party from the smoky shipping port of Glasgow. A common sympathy and appreciation drew us to the home of Scotia's bard. The wild poppies nodded approval, and that "wee, modest, crimson-tipped flower" which dots the Scottish fields smiled in sympathy upon our pilgrimage. A row of brawny men and women hoeing a potato patch, suggested a certain equality of rights, rather to the loss of woman's dignity. Leaving the broad fields, we skirted the open sea, which shimmered in the sunshine, and a mound, immortalized by the poet, towered before us. In the distance it loomed a huge haystack, its conical structure rising abruptly from the water. We recognized in the stern outline Ailsa Craig, the island famed in verse, and familiarly known as "Paddy's Milestone." The wild birds build here, and a gunshot near shore would startle multitudes of timid creatures whose rookeries are in its rocky slopes.

Opposite stretch the long, green shores of Arran, in contrast to the high ocean rock. We entered the quiet town, whose every foot of soil is hallowed by the early life of the sweet singer. The natives knew our destination, and besought our patronage. We "put our money on a bobtailed nag," and headed the dray for the immortal shrine of Alloway. The village street was lined with rows of thrifty homes, two-story, gray, stone houses whose bay windows were half-hidden by roses which clambered to the top. Flowers bloomed beside the gravel walks, and the little town seemed a sheltered haven, blessed by the invisible presence of Him "whose hand guides every plow."

Two miles we rattled over the hard country road, while the charms of beauteous Nature tingled our senses. The thick hedges of privet and hawthorn were broken by a stone wall, canopied with soft moss and tapestried by luxuriant ivy. Stately buildings, or the ragged walls of a ruined castle, rose in picturesque outline against the blue of heaven. Fancy could weave the story of the past, of fallen nobility and forgotten honor, from the wild ruins, while the odor of flowers and new-mown hay, with the vista of overhanging sycamores, fulfilled our dreams of Scottish landscape.

We stopped before a low hut, with whitewashed walls and roof of thatch. Its straw, a foot in depth, was packed on in heavy layers, and as the top became sodden, new layers were added. The eaves stretched far over the sides, so the water could wash down the slope, and the weather-stained, rain-beaten roof formed an impervious covering.

With reverent thought we passed the recording stile of the hut so poor but neat. Thirteen hundred pilgrims, some days, pay tribute here, and it was worth 3000 miles of travel, and dreary days on the Atlantic, to stand within this "old clay biggin." Its rough, uneven floor of stone was holy ground. Cold and cheerless was the birthroom of the sweet singer, who told us that "A blast of January wind blew hansel in on Robin." From that box bed, a bunk in the wall, the poet first looked out upon the world, and only so much daylight saw he then as glimmered through one square foot of space. A few things of his humble home remain unchanged, as the pot and dresser where Dame Burns kept her bowls and cooked her "parritch." Above the dilapidated grate hung crane and hook, and about it hovered the brave tribute to honest poverty, through the bleak northern winter. We recalled the picture of the household assembled at table, each with book and bowl. It was a model home, with parents intelligent, honest, faithful. Amid such Christian guidance, we wonder why the oldest son was not a better man. The bark headed in such a stream should have sailed on life's river with a smoother current. But we find it tempest-tossed, borne down by boisterous winds and deluged by sorrow. Standing on this clean "hearthstane," and looking into the "wee bit ingle," "Cotter's Saturday Night" took new significance. We realized that "from scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeurs rise." Here the quiet lad gazed into the flickering embers and caught the inspiration of his life. In the face of the "tall, worn cotter and priest-like father" the lad saw that nobility which was glorified in "A man's a man, for a' that." In these two rooms, the peasant's butt and ben, the lad lived seven years. The father proved a luckless farmer, and the life was one of unending toil.

At Mount Oliphant, the story of work and want was renewed. Fate was against the pious farmer, Fortune derided him, and the wolf growled at the door. Poor crops resulted from poor soil and poor seasons, and later, the gay poet looked back on these dark days as combining "the cheerless gloom of a hermit, with the unceasing moil of a galley slave." But a book of songs was his delight, and whether following cart or plow, his muse cheered his work.

At 15, he began his havoc with the lassies, and entered into the wild career of country flirt and village beau. Self-abandonment, half-sincerity gave edge to his experiences, and led him to those perilous love affairs which ended in a vortex of misery and shame. Very fascinating was this young lover-lad, and the bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked lass who caught the fancy of the impetuous and impressionable youth was elated by his notice. He loitered in the reaping field with his affinity, helped her bind the sheaves, and took the pricking nettles from her hand. It was a boy-and-girl affair, but it yielded the first notes of his music, the foundation of the poet's fame. Then Burns, as a modern Cupid, was versed in all the affairs of the village, and usually freighted with several of his own. Later, at Lochlea, he brushed up his manners in a dancing class, and loved all the pretty girls in the place. At a coast village, he fraternized with smugglers and rioters! Here he played too high at the game of love, and found himself checkmated. No life could better illustrate the value of environment. His was a downward course from the moment when he slipped from the stern patriarch's rule, and Burns came home to find his dying father disturbed by fears for the wild son's future. At Mossgiel he made another desperate attempt to wrench a scanty living from the stubble. He read farm literature, and toiled late in the field, while the crops failed, and his soul burned for the "bonny gem" and the "timorous sleekit cowering beastie" in the plow share.

He was poet rather than farmer. But his human frailty had triumphed, and disgrace settled down in his home. The church took up the case, and pronounced stern censure. Stung in his pride, goaded by remorse, the poet turned like a stag at bay, and hurled defiance at the church. To hide his smart, he reeled off "The Holy Fair" and "Holy Willie's Prayer." This was a troublous time for Burns, at war with religion, disgraced through love, in dread of the law. What hopes and fears he realized to poor, faithful Jean! He blighted her respected home with sorrow, and, parallel with all this, occurred the incident with Highland Mary. Truly, lovemaking was with Burns lively business, and he kept in practice.

We cannot pass the little port of Greenoch without a thought of an untimely grave, as we recall the romantic meeting by the stream, when winding Ayr reflected the scene of plighted troth, and two young lovers reached across its banks, and pledged on Holy Writ eternal loyalty. It was left for him—to forget! for her—to die. Ah, Mary! Would you had lived to redeem your reckless lover. In later years the memory of your love and faith inspired that monument in verse, "To Mary in Heaven."

With matters thus "agley," there seemed but one course, cowardly flight, and Robert packed his chest, prepared to find luck or fate in the West Indies. Poor and distressed, hounded and humiliated, disgraced by the loss of that spotless name so precious to a Scotchman, he saw his dreary future as a slave driver. "The Gloomy Night is Gathering Fast" was the last song he thought to sing on Scotia's soil. But, presto! a little volume of songs was given to the world. They sang from heart to heart. They were keyed to a responsive note in every Scotchman's breast. The poet sprang from infamy to honor. His youthful sins were forgotten. His fame flew like contagion through the land. Peers, philosophers and farmers vied to honor the Ayshire genius, and the humor of the situation peeps out of the poem which tells us how "I Dinnered wi' a Lord." The steerage passenger for Jamaica made triumphal march to Edinburgh on a borrowed pony, and the live lord became an impressive factor to the poetic plowman.

Thoughts of the years of struggle crowded upon us, as we stood by the cold hearth and gazed into the dead ashes, which, like the poet's life, had flickered into brightness and died out. All about us was poor, and crude and old. An old-time portrait on the wall, marred and defaced by tourists, was formerly the sign outside the house. Beyond the living-rooms was the long row of stalls and cow sheds of the gude man's farm. The best room is now a small emporium, fitted for the relic hunter. The new part, all spick and span, serves as lunchroom and museum for curios. The visitor may regale himself with luscious strawberries and cream, delicious coffee, bread and cakes, while the spirit of genius hovers o'er the banquet. The generous Australian ordered a bountiful repast. The Scotch lassie, obeying her natural impulse for thrift and self-reliance, informed me that she often told her cousin, "he seemed to think there was no end to his bawbees. It would be better if he had a little more of our Scotch meanness." Though tempted to tell her that a Plymouth Rock pilgrim always "shared up," I only smiled grimly at her shrewdness, resolved to go my third at the counter! She followed that economy which had been the rigid lesson of the poet's home. The room was filled with souvenirs. A handsomely carved chair came from the wood of the Edinburgh press, and on its summit stood Tam and Souter Jonny, who had also two quaint chairs to their memory, inlaid with porcelain scenes from their great adventure. The walls bear portraits, busts, scenes from the author's life, and allegorical groups from the Edinburgh monument. Victory, descending with her wreath to crown the poet, as he mused at the cottage fire, unites the past and future of his life. We stopped before scenes of the famous drive, where the witches appeared through chinks in the wall and Tam tore madly to the brig. The snuff box, china, and bamboo walking stick of the poet had interest for the stranger, and we held it a priceless privilege to read the lines which he had penned, of the exciting chase, the perilous leap, and the tailless mare, in their original version. A gem of a poem, signed "An American," pays loyal homage to the poet. One is pleased to find Longfellow's worthy tribute "To the Ayrshire Plowman," among the treasures.

The familiar picture of the poet entertaining the Duchess of Gordon recalled the brilliant period of his life at Edinburgh. Amid those strange surroundings, with stately dames and lordly sires, our Robin shone his brightest. He neither cringed nor fawned. He never lost his bearings. Among the rich and the gay, the plebeian poet ever proved, "The rank is but the guinea's stamp, the man's the gowd for a' that." In the clay biggin or the stately palace, he realized the high level to which his genius raised him, and he found no superior in rank. Picture the flashing of his lustrous eye, and hear his scorching repartee, had anyone dared snub him! In the nobility of manhood and the radiancy of genius, he asked no quarter for humble birth and boyhood. The lords and ladies hungered for his every word. He was the shooting star, the flashing meteor, in their midst. A king in conversation, no clownish faux pas are recorded against him. Mirth and humor, tenderness and pathos, oratory and eloquence, were his to command. He was petted, courted, lionized, and he enjoyed it. But his star soon reached its zenith. It flashed across his sky with the speed of a comet, and sank in utter darkness behind the far horizon. Another year, the doors of the élite had closed against him, and the poet was a party to low haunts, ribald songs and grovelling friendships. Penury and depression, sickness, destitution and shame, ended the sad career.

From the treasure-house we passed to the historic kirk, centuries old, broken and dilapidated. Yet its stout walls may stand for centuries to come, an ancient skeleton defying Father Time. An aged son of the soil, grimy as the earth itself, sprang from the ruins, and reeled off the story of Tam's flight. His energy made real the cutty sarks, dancing in wild abandon, peering and leering at Tam between the crevices. Seen through the grating, the burial spot might indeed be ghostly to the creative fancy of one who had "been bowsing o'er the nappy" into the late hours of a wild night. For, when he started homeward, "Tam was fu' an unco glorious, o'er a' the ills of life victorious." We followed close on the heels of Tam, as our orator worked his witches up to gleeful fury. The impecunious old wretch had made this graveyard the study of his life. He knew the name, date and history of every lord and lady, and with tedious pertinacity he rolled off the noble list. What cared we for titled nobodies. Peace to their ashes! Let them rest beneath the cold, gray slab, till Gabriel blows the resurrection bugle, and may they give a worthier account of themselves than this old man could render. There is only one immortal name in Ayr, and that is "Filed on Fame's eternal bead roll." More to us than royal rank was the old plane tree, wedged into the church wall, and we poked our fingers reverently into the stagnant pool which was the christening bowl of Baby Burns. The water is less sacred in many a grand baptismal font. Opposite the old kirk stands the modern monument, a semi-Grecian structure with pillars, surmounted with queer dragons. We toiled up a winding stairway, whose slippery, deep-worn steps proved the honor paid the poet. Below were dainty gardens, and a winding path among dense shrubs. Beyond, the sinuous stream was spanned by two immortal brigs.

Strolling in the fields, we came upon a party of picnickers listening eagerly to a reading. Seeing us linger as near as courtesy allowed, the kindly reader said: "Will you not join my audience, so you can say that you heard the poem before it was given to the world?" Appreciating the exquisite kindness, we listened gratefully to the reading of "The Auld Brig's Welcome, on the Unveiling of the Burns Monument," by our American Consul, Wallace Bruce, famous for his speeches, lectures, poems. No one could have been more appreciative, gracious and tender than this American citizen, keen scholar and kind critic, honored to unveil the monument to Scotia's bard.

With sadness we shifted the scene from the birthplace, quiet, peaceful Ayr, to the burial place of Burns—that dirty, brawling town, Dumfries. What a pit wherein to sink his noble self! How the change must have rasped his finer nature! But the poet's crown had fallen in the dust. The farm, chosen in the interests of poetry rather than produce, had failed. Friends had deserted. The struggle for bread was maintained through the grovelling duties of the excise. We challenge a more pathetic picture. The gay, reckless lover, the social success, the divine poet, the national singer, reduced to the role of petty detective among the Solway smugglers, prying for illicit beer trade among the housewives! This—or starvation—for the wee, toddlin' things at home. So for business he seized the kegs, and levied the fines; but for pleasure, he dropped to the boisterous, rollicking crew at the tavern. Amid this moral darkness there was no lessening of the mental light. From out of the depths sounded the sweet strains of his lyre. These last five years at Dumfries were the song period of his life. He had refused to barter the songs for shekels, and he rapturously rolled out his ditties, caroling the gay notes like a bird on the wing. Sorrow enough he had caused his faithful Jean, yet blithely he sang:

> "Of a' the airts the wind can blow,
> I dearly like the west,
> For there the bonnie lassie lives,
> The lassie I lo'e best."

The year 1795 opened with that bugle-call to freedom, "A man's a man for a' that." Over a hundred years this battle cry of equality has thrilled the world. It is a synonym of the poet's name. This noblest paean of the peasant bard will ever be the watchword of humanity. By life's flickering candle the last love song was penned. Then the light died out in the socket. The discarded poet became a dead hero, and a knell of sorrow was rung by a mourning nation. We read of great honors at the last, a military funeral, with arms reversed and muffled drum.

The world's late homage seems but mockery, when we recall how the poet was ostracized through life. We cannot visit his haunts without sad thought for the short career so filled with startling contradictions. Never were the ups and downs of life more marked. Could the possibilities of life be finer, and the realities sadder? Such mountain heights of bliss, such valleys of humiliation! Tender sympathies, generous impulses, ambitious dreams, keen disappointments, turbulent longings, impetuous deeds, remorseful agonies, made a potpourri of life. A volume of strength and weakness, and a store of wisdom and folly, read in the story of Burns. It pleads for that priceless virtue which includes all others, as the poet realized when he wrote: "Prudent, cautious self-control is wisdom's root."

Despite the shadows, let us catch the sunshine of his life. Remembering that he made us heirs of an immortal legacy, let us be grateful for the heritage, throwing their veil of charity over every weakness, and as we glory in each worthy thought and noble song of this heaven-born poet, "We'll a' be proud o' Robin."

GARDENING AN EDUCATION.

THE EMBELLISHMENT OF. SCHOOL GROUNDS IMPORTANT.

By Ernest Braunton.

HISTORY records that the care and cultivation of ornamental plants has had a refining influence upon our race at all stages in its development, though perhaps more marked today than ever before. Observant writers, too, have noticed that the greatest number of true plant lovers are to be found among the educated and refined. By education is not necessarily meant graduation from either schools or colleges; nor by refinement those drilled in the laws of etiquette merely; but people who are both educated and refined by their very nature, and who intuitively love nature in all her departments, being themselves, unconsciously, perhaps, the most perfect specimens, mentally, of the highest type of animated nature. Such people are usually much envied by those less gifted, and very properly, too, for they constitute nature's noblemen and noblewomen.

Pergola at the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

Perennial Borders at the Raymond

The desire of our people to beautify their surroundings has become more general within the last decade than at any like period in our history. We have awakened from the old stereotyped methods to realize the possibility of design in the adjustment of the house, roads, paths and other adjuncts necessary to the convenience and comforts of the home. We have found that we may have utility without sacrificing beauty; every feature is considered as to its particular fitness, and each arranged with regard to making a harmonious whole. Those of moderate means can never hope to rival the wealthy interior decorations, such as sculpture, paintings and other works of art, but do not lose sight of the fact that trees and plants will grow as well for you as for a Vanderbilt. Your yard, though less in extent, may with a slight annual expenditure, and with fifteen minutes each day devoted to its care, be made to look as beautiful as the estate of a millionaire.

As a rule, remarkably good judgment is shown by most home owners of moderate means in the selection of plants and the placing thereof, but the wealthy man, he who can purchase and improve large grounds, does not, as a rule, escape the gardener's "art." He needs "advice," for the costly features of his residence have led him to desire corresponding effects on his grounds, and too often he seeks to economize by procuring the services of an ordinary lawn builder—a fatal mistake. Luckily the great mass of our people escape such a fate, and the number of good small gardens and of people brought under the uplifting influences of plant life is steadily on the increase. It cannot be too forcibly urged upon the attention of those intrusted with educational institutions that one of the most certain means of encouraging a desire for studies in natural history, and forming correct principles of taste in young minds, is that of school gardens and landscape embellishment of school and college grounds.

Misuse of Vines.

The delicate tracery of vines upon buildings of severe lines serves to enhance their beauty, and harmonize and "mellow" them into the surrounding landscape, but when they are allowed to conceal or even partially conceal a house of good architecture, they become a nuisance and an eyesore, both to the owner and the observant public. There are some structures that are so irredeemably ugly that it were merciful to hide them with anything, but such examples are rare. Vines should be used to heighten or accentuate existing lines of beauty, but never to hide unless the object so treated is positively ugly. We have many buildings of good style whose chief attractions are completely hidden by ivy. In passing we pause to wonder how long the plants were in covering such a space or why the owner desired it, but no admiration is felt for the effects thus gained.

The Pergola or Covered Pathway.

"What is a pergola?" is a question often asked. Nothing harmful. In simple English it is a covered way or path, a charming medium for displaying vines of all sorts, giving them a better chance for development than when grown on a building. Here we may see them inside and out, in sunshine and shade. But nearly all that the writer has seen in the vicinity of Los Angeles are obtrusive and therefore obnoxious; a pergola should never be made unless there is apparent use for it, and then, if near the dwelling, it should smack somewhat of the same style of architecture. In landscape gardening proper there is no place for it, but for the more formal styles, especially the Italian, there is some excuse, often a use for it, as there is in gardens of mixed styles. It gives the garden, if properly constructed and placed, an added beauty and variety.

The simplest and best uses for pergolas are as dividing lines between the vegetable and the flower garden, or between two plats, planted in different styl unsightly objects; or they may be used effectively tennis courts by leaving the side next the planted. They may be of any form, size, style of architecture. The best material to moved from a plain and open view of the cially if in the country or suburbs, is the bodies trees cut so as to leave a fork at the proper which to lay the main cross-beams. When dwellings of pretentious style, the uprights may of turned or square columns of wood or piers brick, stone, or concrete, as the material and style residence may determine. In small gardens or pretentious residences the pergola should be constructed of light material. In large grounds, large buildings or in Italian gardens it may be If not kept properly covered with vines, all styles unsightly, though in a climate like ours they be kept in good condition with little care. In California, too, we have more use for such features have colder or less sunny climes.

Rustic Boxes and Baskets.

One of the chief objections urged against baskets is the unsightliness of the basket itself, few succeed in getting it covered with a green. Such failure has lead to the making of baskets or hanging pots and baskets of willow, nita and similar materials. A gardener at has been making boat-shaped receptacles by out a short section of sycamore at the time when the bark clings the closest, so that the not peel off or get loose. The ends of the varnished or oiled to show the natural color of the wood. Altogether these are the most durable hangers the writer has seen. A lilar effect in window boxes may be gained by the outside of the ordinary box strips of bark tree.

Flowers for Dining-rooms.

There is no place in the house where give such a delicate finish or have such a ous influence as upon the dining table. To foliage and flowers is desirable, but a bunch greens or flowers will touch all the other, and more necessary, furnishings with a breath The simplest scheme is a central vase or next in order comes the fern dish or basket. these effects may be extended quite easily by ers on the cloth, and some very pretty designs carried out in this way.

One of the finest decorations for the breakfast a wealth of morning glories, especially the one cally as "Heavenly Blue." Pick just before stems of sufficient length to allow of their gracefully over the sides of the receptacle. from the same plant in this case, and in all other as possible. Of course some plants have no foliage table use, and then the use of ferns or some other similar in effect must be resorted to. In the winter dining-table effects may be gained by using and with us they are becoming quite common and fore easily procured. Of course, roses and are with us at all times, but by reason of their commonness should be avoided. During the past years we seem to have gone carnation mad. One go into a florist's store and ask for flowers without ing carnations first thrust before his eyes. We have many flowers that have grace and beauty as well color mass that it is surprising our florists do not to a proper sense of their value. Almost any garden supply a greater and more pleasing variety than of our largest floral stores. Flowers should be used season as much as possible, and for some time chrysanthemums will be with us. In these we may a pleasing variety of color and form. Later we have to use a few carnations, and then the daffodil son comes and furnishes us with some of the most tive and generally satisfactory table decorations obtained throughout the floral calendar.

Roses from Seed.

Gardeners and others having plenty of time and for experiments may gain much pleasure, and little profit, by raising seedling roses. Though the rian emasculates and cross-fertilizes his stock, the work is generally, in our "Land of Sunshine," plished by bees and other insects. Not all your bushes will bear apples or hips, but in nearly all lections a few do so. Gather these when ripe, and the seeds in a warm location. Though the chances heavily against you, some of the world's best roses been obtained in this way. Such a method may so sure of success as is generally the case with yet you will find much enjoyment in the work, "sport" may never come; in the meantime, you a rose that would be the "sensation of the day."

Plant Cyclamen.

Everyone having a shady corner containing well-drained, yet rich soil, should grow a few called by some "shooting star," "Persian violet," Except for a short rest in midsummer they bloom continuously than any other bulbous plant. common mistake made in their cultivation is planting the corm or bulb too deeply. One-half should remain above ground. While they need stantly watered, the drainage must be good, easily induced. The flowers vary in color white to a very deep purple—often beautifully or striped.

The City Beautiful—Its Streets, Parks and Lakes.

THE BILLBOARD NUISANCE.

[illegible] DESECRATION OF THE BEAUTY OF LANDSCAPES.

In Germany a law has been passed which authorizes the police to abolish any billboards or other advertising devices that disfigure the landscape. In this we again see a European country taking the lead in a movement for more beautiful cities. To our shame is it recorded that American firms, more than those of all other nationalities combined, have made such a move necessary. At whatever port the American tourist lands, the old familiar billboards so common at home are the first objects that meet his view, and many of our loyal citizens have blushed with mortification at these shameless exhibitions of so-called "American enterprise." Returning tourists have frequently expressed their disgust, through the columns of the press, that when abroad they could seldom be out of sight of the offensive "American" billboard.

Reform in this matter, like charity, should begin at home. In Los Angeles and vicinity the desecration of [illegible], buildings, fences, etc., especially along our [illegible] and electric lines has already degenerated into [illegible]right nuisance. Posters, stickers, placards, metal [illegible] painted "displays," every kind of advertising con[illegible] by man, are indiscriminately placed on all avail[illegible] and objects. The flagrant and persistent out[illegible] against personal and property rights by some of [illegible] bill-posting companies should in itself be enough [illegible] our municipal authorities to aid in stamping out [illegible] evil. It is hard to conceive of anything more [illegible] to the esthetic welfare of "The City Beauti[illegible] the unbridled license accorded these advertis[illegible]. At present there seems no way to com[illegible] evil except the indignant citizens whose prop[illegible] are invaded go forth under cover of dark[illegible] demolish these signs. While we do not coun[illegible] lawlessness, a moral right to perform such a [illegible] is patent. Improvement associations, at [illegible], could plant blue gums or some fast-growing [illegible] of such signs, and in some cases, no doubt, [illegible] owner would appreciate such plantations.

[illegible] for Being Right.

The offering of prizes to school children for the best gardens, etc., proves a powerful incentive to the production of desirable results, but the promiscuous giving of prizes for the improvement of home grounds is of doubtful value. It is greatly to be hoped that our local improvement organizations may succeed in educating our property owners to a clearer and better understanding of garden art and the duty of the individual toward the city in general. To forward such work circulars should be issued setting forth the few simple rules of planting and the care of plants both ornamental and useful. Only in this way can we expect the masses to approach the problem with any degree of intelligence or hope of success.

[illegible]

In "Out of Doors," by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, occur some of the finest thoughts on the subject recorded, and so applicable to all places and all times that we cannot forego a liberal quotation.

"It sometimes seems as if beauty in the surroundings of life were not appreciated, nor even desired, here in our America. The man who goes so far as to paint his house and to 'fix up' his place is reviled as a 'dude' in many parts of our country. A certain brave scorn of beauty seems to characterize most of the people of our new West.

"On the other hand we see, when we come to study the matter, that if the experience of the past counts for anything, there is a power in beauty which works for joy and for good as nothing else in this naughty world does or can. And when we come to see this clearly, we are at once compelled to abandon our indifference and to substitute therefor the eager desire of old Plato, 'that our youth might dwell in a land of health amid fair sights and sounds.' Alas! that 'fair sights' do not spring up spontaneously around our modern lives as they seem to have done in the Old World. In the long-settled corners of Europe, men's fields, lanes, roads, houses, churches, and even whole villages and towns seem to combine with nature to produce scenery of a more lovable type than nature working alone can offer us. With us the contrary is too often the fact. Our buildings, fences, highways, and railroads, not to speak of our towns, are often scars which mar the face of nature without possessing any compensating beauty of their own. It is evident that beauty, in the surroundings of life, is not to be had in this modern day without taking thought, and exercising vigilance. And our thought and our vigilance must be rightly directed, or it will defeat our purpose. Many a man, becoming suddenly conscious of a desire for beauty, has attempted to attain his heart's wish by forbidden and impossible ways. Thus country roadsides have been 'slicked up' until all beauty has been 'slicked' out of them."

TROPICAL SCENE IN EASTLAKE PARK.

Park Lakes and Ponds.

The margins of our park lakes are seldom intelligently treated. Nothing looks more beautiful than to see trees and shrubs bending gracefully over the banks or grouped in harmonious masses near the water's edge. Then we have numberless moisture-loving plants of smaller size that might easily be made to cover the unsightly stones that border our ponds. It is not necessarv to cumber the whole margin with shrubs and plants, but they may be disposed in a natural manner. At present no park lake in Los Angeles shows a margain line properly planted.

We have too much of the artificial in the shape of stone walls, or what is much more ugly and stupid, plank curbs. No lake or pond should have a "made" margin unless absolutely necessary to hold the soil in place and even then such stone work should not be a perpendicular wall, but "rip-rapped" or laid on natural slopes, with plenty of interstices left for the planting of a lakeside vegetation. Nowhere does a trimmed-up tree look so gaunt and ghost-like, so forbidding and unnatural as at the lakeside. The direct opposite of such growth is what makes the weeping willow so efficacious in gaining harmonious waterside effects. A lake margin properly planted may be a thing of beauty throughout the year. There is room for much improvement in our local parks. Too many of our political park gardeners have no love for natural effects, and care little for the tastes or wishes of the general public, who are after all, entitled to a voice in the matter. People who know what should be are naturally reticent about expressing an opinion when in the parks for fear of being sneered at by those who care for nothing except to keep on good terms with those who have a "pull."

FIELD NOTES.

New Orange Pest.

R. M. TEAGUE, of San Dimas, who has the largest citrus nursery in the world, writes that he found a new insect troubling the orange trees in the North during a recent visit to that part of the State. In some places these insects had woven their webs all over the fruiting orange trees. They seem to work more upon the young growth than upon the mature foliage, causing the leaves to become striped and disfigured. This gives the orchard trees the appearance of being stricken with a blight of some kind. Nothing of this kind has ever been observed by Mr. Teague in the South, but it has become so common North as to attract attention and some alarm. He will send specimens about over the State for identification.

A Blasted Scheme.

A GENTLEMAN hailed me the other day with the information that, had his advice been taken several years ago the rate on citrus fruits would have been reduced at that time and millions of dollars saved to the growers which have gone to stuff the receipts of the railroads. He talked so rapidly and with such animation that I did not have time to ask him his name. He said "they" would not listen to him a little bit, though his plan of forcing a reduction in rates was practically automatic. But it did not work itself, because "they" did not want a reduction. Coming from one with the appearance of business capacity and standing, time permitting, I would have told him that knocking "them" in that way was beneath one so potent that the railroads would bow to him on sight if "they" had permitted him to get at the said roads with his scheme. All are not from the first State west of Illinois who would like more definite explanations, and it is folly to cast slurs upon those indefinites who have by their own misjudgment denied themselves the position of dictators to the railroads of the United States.

Horticultural Office Removed.

ON account of the pressure for room in the Courthouse, it has been decided at this writing to move the office of the Horticultural Commissioners to a new location. The office after the 15th will be found on the lower floor of the building at the northwest corner of Temple and New High streets, just opposite the Courthouse, entrance from New High street. It will be found a very convenient place for the farmers who have business at the office, and a very good location for insect breeding, as the light is abundant and the room sufficient. One of the rooms is large enough for the farmers' meetings, which have been held in the old office for four years, and it is an all-around good situation. The office to be vacated has been recognized as the most desirable room in the Courthouse, being well lighted and 40x25 feet in size, but in common with the Law Library, the School Superintendent's, the Coroner's, the Public Administrator's office, the eviction has been necessary.

Short Courses in Agriculture.

BEGINNING on the 18th day of this month, a series of short courses in agriculture will be held at the University at Berkeley. Fruit growing will be the programme to the end of the month. The other courses will be "Irrigation," "Animal Industry," "Nutrition," "Entomology," "The State Farmers' Institute" and "Viticulture." These lectures and discussions are designed to meet the needs of all persons who desire to make themselves more familiar with the principles underlying farming operations and with the most approved practice. Full particulars may be had from E. J. Wickson, Dean of College of Agriculture, Berkeley, Cal.

A Large Fruit Farm.

ON the Cudahy ranch, just outside the limits of Los Angeles city, farming and fruit growing is conducted upon a large scale. Here we have the biggest apple orchard in the South, an enormous walnut grove and a general assortment of large industries in the agricultural line. The ranch has somewhere near 25,000 apple trees from one to three years old, many of which are full of fruit. The manager, Mr. John Hund, has planted 15,000 Pearmains, showing faith in the best valley variety we have. There are 5000 Bellefleur trees, 3000 Missouri Pippin, and miscellaneous varieties most of which have been planted for pollination at the distance of every ten or twenty rows throughout the orchard. One of the most interesting features of this farm is the walnut grove consisting of 500 acres of young trees. One hundred and fifty acres is of grafted trees, and the manager told me he would like to have the whole acreage of the grafted stock, as the trees are superior in every way, and began bearing at two years of age. If anyone would see what a grafted walnut grove will do he will find a fine object lesson here in a year or so. On this ranch there are forty acres of Bartlett pears, two years old, and about ten acres planted to peaches and plums. On the farming acreage are 100 acres of alfalfa, 200 acres of corn and 1000 acres of barley which with the orchards pretty well cover the 28,000 acres of the ranch. It is a big undertaking to bring such a large tract into productive condition, but when it is all in bearing, these orchards will be another point of great interest to people who come to Los Angeles thinking all our suburban property has been turned into town lots.

Petty Frauds Upon Farmers.

IT has been stated to me on one occasion that the exposure of a fake tree medicine had saved a farmer a large sum of money in inducing him to wait developments before purchasing the remedy. The "dope" was afterward declared worse than worthless by a committee of farmers. The threats that were made to hold The Times responsible for the faker's loss of business were about as petty as the "two-bit" fraud exposed, and of course did not prevent the following up of other quackery of this class. It is now necessary to warn the farmers of a literary abomination that is offered for $1, and has been purchased by some of our people to their sorrow and disgust. Like a certain fraudulent concern on Broadway which The Times exposed sometime ago and whose sponsor is now looking into the portals of the penitentiary, this New York or New Jersey concern is using cabalistic lore and religious mummery to induce investments in its rubbish. I do not care to advertise the despicable rascal by name, who is sending out this literature at $1 per volume, for his grafting concern, but I feel it a duty to wave the signal of common sense to the farmers lest more of them part with their money in buying the "work." In reading this book, beautifully embossed and printed in the highest style of the art except in the enormous use of capitals and Italics, one seriously questions the right of some men to express themselves in print or otherwise, so cunning and vicious is the sophistry of this book brought into play to aid in extracting the coin from the farmer. Do not purchase agricultural books that have not the mark of merit or the endorsement of honest men. In the case before me you would be disgusted with yourself and ashamed to have encouraged with your money one of the most consummate frauds ever attempted at $1 per volume and the same per acre.

Competition in Oranges.

IN a letter of August 20, from Frank G. Carpenter, dated Antilla, Cuba, August, 1905, the writer gives some information regarding the orange industry in the island that should be of vital interest to the California orange grower. The statement Mr. Carpenter makes and the description he gives of the orchards he visited, their extent and the business qualification of their proprietors induce one to believe that in the near future California will have a strong competitor in the citrus fruit business from that island. It is well to look the situation fairly in the face and see what advantages this orange-producing section has over California, if any. Nipe Bay is located on the 21st degree of north latitude, almost due south from New York, or about 1300 miles from the latter place, three days' sea voyage distat. It is entirely outside the frost belt, having this advantage over Florida. According to Mr. Carpenter's report the men entering this business are wealthy with large capital to back them. Cuban labor is without doubt much lower than labor in California. Men with large capital of their own, or with capital back of them can dictate as to the freight rates on the water. If the rates are not satisfactory they can put on their own line of boats. No irrigation is required in Cuba, refrigeration when required would be at actual cost, the ice plant being part of the ship's equipment. The customhouse duty on oranges from Cuba is 80 cents per 100 pounds. This would allow 45 cents per 100 pounds for the steamship freight rate to bring the cost of placing the fruit in the seaboard market to the same figure as the freight rate charged by the railroads from California to the east-coast points. The freight rates are in their own hands, and not under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

How is California to meet this competition? Can the five orange-growing counties of Southern California and the much-frosted orange belt of Florida overcome the balance, or overcome the orange-eating population of the country when they clamor to have the custom duty on, this fruit reduced or even wiped out so they can have oranges cheaper? To meet this condition of the orange situation it might be well to look it over, as it is at present, and note the various expenses the grower has to furnish the money for in moving his crop.

The freight charge now paid to the railroads on citrus fruits is $1.25 per 100 pounds, or an average of 10.08 mills per ton per mile. Allowing 362 boxes to the car, from November, 1904, to the date of this writing, 29,152 cars have been moved. This makes 759,843,792 pounds. Cost for moving at $1.25 per 100 pounds, $9,498,047. The railroads take no chances regarding this being paid on account of this being perishable freight, as they require prepayment of freight or sufficient bond to secure the same before shipment is made. Other commodities of double the gross valuation of the orange at the shipping point, under exactly similar conditions as to distance, elevations to be overcome and ratio of paying and non-paying freight handled with each car are moved for 6.6 mills per ton per mile—a difference of 3.48 mills, or about $3,230,000.

Another industry that the orange grower has been a profitable patron of is the lumber business. The demand for box stuff has enabled the lumber companies to work up much of their stock that otherwise would have been of little value. Allowing 362 boxes to the carload, and 29,152 cars moved, makes 10,553,386 boxes used so far this season. At 14 cents per box, this figure designed to include all the expenses of getting in and Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

[illegible] Lawns and Gardens.

I RECENTLY had an interview with a gentleman just arrived from New York. He said he came to Southern California from mere curiosity and to have a short outing somewhere. Within a week the decision was made by the excursionist to become a permanent resident of this part of the State. The beauty of the suburban homes of Los Angeles city and the surrounding towns was the cause of this decision, together with the [illegible] car service, making it possible to reach these towns cheaply and easily. In the circuitous route ending in this city he had seen nothing in the line of ornamental plants comparable with our Phoenix palms, and from this his vagrant imagination turned beauties in general of our residence locations. Palms shading a whole front yard could not be but 14 years old. Another lot planted but two years, with fifty leaves on each were [illegible], and homes established but one year with their ornamental shrubs and flowers in full bloom were [illegible]. But such is the record, and this type of the thousands of tourists has cast his lot with us largely on account of the enterprise of our people in adorning their premises with beautiful plants.

Stringfellow's Dolce Far Niente.

[illegible] STRINGFELLOW, of Texas, has made a national reputation upon his theory that the way to make trees thrive and create is simply to set them out and let them alone. His system of laborless horticulture would be very popular if it should produce good results. If one can grow good Bartlett pears in the blue grass sod or apples in alfalfa, it puts to the bad all theories of intensive cultivation and makes futile all the expenditure the orange grower is lavishing with the plow and cultivator. If Stringfellow's aggressive and widely-[illegible] theories are true, the front lawn and the back yard are as good as the field of open culture. If true, [illegible] will be turned to orchards, pumpkins will [illegible] on the front fences and watermelons overrun the tennis courts. That his mooted system is taking hold upon the imagination of the American horticulturist is true, but it will not be the first fad that proved [illegible]. The conservative farmer with his eyes open is the type that is not carried away by even an honest [illegible] such as Mr. Stringfellow undoubtedly is.

The lawn sod, the meadow or the pasture are all [illegible], according to Mr. Stringfellow, with no cultivation. [illegible] advocates planting trees with very short tap roots, and in a recent article cites six seedling peach trees [illegible] were planted near Lampasas fifty-one years ago and [illegible] now in full vigor. Fifty years ago trees were planted [illegible] from seed in the place they were to grow. No [illegible] the Lampasas trees were planted this way and [illegible] up good natural tap roots, giving them longevity [illegible] vigor. In declaiming against the "accumulated [illegible] and errors of the good old ways of our fathers" he has given an example of the efficacy of these [illegible] methods in his efforts to show that the modern orchards of his vicinity have succumbed to the plow and cultivator. If Mr. Stringfellow would visit the lawns and [illegible] of many Los Angeles homes he would have half-[illegible] examples of what the sweet, do-nothing life will [illegible].

[illegible] Seed Distribution.

The result of last spring's outsendings of seed from the Department of Agriculture is up for criticism, the [illegible] number of objectors to this system of compliment-[illegible] farmer coming forward in opposition. It may [illegible], as alleged, that the commercial seedsmen, especially the retail dealers, are backing the fight against [illegible] distribution of seeds. If they are that [illegible] not touch the merits of the discussion. I come in [illegible] with this proposition oftener than any other, and [illegible] advise gardeners to patronize some good [illegible] in preference to depending in any measure [illegible] the annuities of the government. Not that the [illegible] sent out are less pure or vital, for the Secretary [illegible] charge of the free-seed distribution is doing the [illegible] on the strictest business methods. But the successful grower must have established varieties and must [illegible] seeds of kinds adapted to his needs. This is the [illegible] of the whole proposition, namely, that the sower [illegible] make the selection of seed a part of his business, [illegible] succeed otherwise.

[illegible] the millions expended in sending petty packages of assorted varieties of vegetable and flower seed [illegible] added to the amount of money Secretary Wilson used in the introduction of new seeds and plants [illegible] of the seed-distribution law. How much [illegible] thoroughly the ends of the earth would have been [illegible] for new economic plants, and how much sooner the present record in that line have been established. We have alfalfas, millets, Kaffir corns, dates, [illegible], tropical fruits and a score of other valuable importations that have added millions to the far[illegible] and established farming and dairying [illegible] they could not have succeeded with any known [illegible] farm crops. We cannot expect ever to uproot [illegible] habit, yet we can place the system in its [illegible] of merit and possibly establish more [illegible] practice of the department that has brought [illegible].

[illegible]

[illegible] to the consideration of every florist, [illegible] chrysanthemum grower or not, a paper by [illegible] Smith, of Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., [illegible] in full by the Florists' Exchange. The paper is well calculated to shake up the ideas of every professional and make him review his own methods in the light of new successes and the irresistible tendencies toward specialization. Mr. Smith does not state a single point wherein manures are to be preferred to commercial fertilizers. I have redistributed his arguments in favor of the use of commercial fertilizers under the heads of cost, convenience, and results as follows:

The cost in Mr. Smith's experience is less. A barrel of liquid fertilizer cost 1 1-3c, which a barrel or liquid cow manure of the same strength costs 3 1-6c. Taking all into consideration the cow manure costs five times as much as the chemicals.

As to convenience, the chemicals may be odorless, tasteless and colorless, and they avoid the filtering and expense necessary in the tank and distributing-hose system employed in progressive establishments.

The results in general are in favor of the new method as regards accuracy. It is not always perfectly safe to use liquid cow manure of the color of weak tea, and it is always uncertain. The inaccuracy of the color test has been repeatedly shown. In particular the use of liquid cow manure is apt to make coarseness in stem, leaf and flower, and consequent lack of refinement and substance in the blooms. Sulphate of ammonia, added occasionally, Mr. Smith says, will harden the tissues, and thus add to the keeping qualities of the flowers.

The prejudice against chemicals is partly due to the bad effects of overdoses which may be easily given when first experimenting with them. For this condition there is an antidote, viz., an abundance of water, especially of hot water for desperate cases. It is a principle that no liquid food of any kind should be applied to dry soil. The bed or bench should first be thoroughly watered.—[W. H. Miller.

Fruit Pests.

"FRUIT FLIES" are sometimes responsible for a serious loss of fruit in Ceylon, more particularly in the case of mangoes and oranges. Fine specimens of the "Rupee mango," completely ruined by these insects, have recently been submitted to me. The fruit is infested with the maggots of the fly, setting up fermentation and decay. This is a most difficult pest to control. The only practicable treatment is to collect and destroy the fallen fruits. To be of any use, this must be carried out systematically, at least once a day, preferably morning and evening. Otherwise the maggots will leave the fruit and pupate in the earth, to emerge later as winged flies capable of carrying on the mischief. The infected fruit may be destroyed either by boiling, or by placing it in vats or barrels, and covering it with water. The maggots, on leaving the fruit, will be drowned. Our local mango fly appears to be Dacus ferrugineus, which occurs also in India.—[Tropical Agriculture.

The Use of Mulches.

IT is surprising how slowly the idea of the mulch comes into the popular favor. Only a few gardeners here and there and a few farmers seem to be acquainted with it, and yet it is one of the most useful agencies of the farm operations imaginable. I have for twenty years been familiar with the use of mulch. I have seen it used on farms and orchards, in gardens, and in every place where it was desirable to keep down the weeds and keep in the moisture. Yet only the other day I saw a large area being mowed that was rimmed by plats of trees and shrubs in which the weeds had already started. There was probably half a ton of this green material absolutely wasted. It should have been put around the bushes to keep down the weeds and keep the moisture from drying up. Instead it became an impediment to the running of the water in the ditches. I can but assume that the man who did the handling of this area knew nothing about the value of mulch. In some parts of the Western States whole communities have taken to using mulch in tue potato fields. All the straw stacks that are left in the spring are carefully spread between the rows of potatoes. I have seen fields of four and five acres thus protected. The advantage in its use is that no other work has to be done on the potatoes, except to kill the bugs.—[American Farmer.

Immunity from Fungi.

AN Australian agricultural station has lately made some interesting experiments to render immune from parasitic fungi plants of tomato and cucumber. Three hundred cucumber seedlings and an equal number of tomato seedlings were subjected to experiment, fifty of each being used as check plants. When the seedlings were a fortnight old, the cucumbers were grouped around eight large cucumber plants badly affected by anthracnose and wilt, and the tomato plants bearing numerous blotches on the leaves caused by leaf blight. The specific course of treatment consisted of watering the plants every third day with a solution consisting of one part of sulphate of copper in 700 parts of water. The check plants, which were not watered with the copper solution, were indiscriminately mixed with the treated plants. The watering was done during the afternoon, and the quantity used for each plant was sufficient to soak the soil thoroughly.

After a month, all the treated tomato plants were perfectly free from disease. On the other hand, one or both cotyledons of thirty-four cucumber plants showed blotches of the disease. At the same time, a considerable number of untreated check plants, both cucumber and tomatoes, were badly diseased. At this stage, both treated plants and checks were sprayed with water containing the spores causing their respective diseases, and this was continued weekly until the end of the experiments. Under this drastic treatment, all the untreated check plants, both cucumbers and tomatoes, were badly diseased during the following two weeks.

After six weeks' treatment the strength of the solution was increased to 1 part of solution of copper in 600 parts of water, and the soil in which the plants were growing was soaked every fourth day until the end of the experiments, which lasted for eleven weeks. At the expiration of this period both cucumber and tomato plants were bearing a good crop of well-grown mature fruit.

Trucking Turnips.

WE know of plenty of truck growers who plant turnips regularly every fall and make from $100 to $200 per acre. If our subscribers will plant even a small patch of turnips according to our directions, they will find this is a money crop when shipped intelligently to large markets in the South and all Northern and Eastern markets.

The secret is: Grow the best, pack the best and ship only to reliable markets. At many shipping points are now small cash buyers who hardly ever refuse to buy turnips when offered in attractive manner. The turnips with the green tops make an admirable dish in winter and spring, and are relished by everybody if properly cooked.

It is generally supposed that turnips will do well on any soil and with scarcely any fertilizing. This is a mistake. Turnips should be planted in the South on light, loamy, well-manured land. Cottonseed meal, broadcasted, is an excellent fertilizer for turnips, and so is well-rotted stable manure. If other manures are used, use 600 pounds per acre, especially manures that contain nitrogen, actual potash, available phosphoric acid.

The intention of using manures is to stimulate quick growth, as no vegetable is palatable or salable if grown slow, and is tough in consequence.

The ground for turnips should be well plowed and harrowed and thoroughly pulverized. This also tends to quick growth. Turnips can be sown broadcast. Many truckers sow in rows two and one-half feet apart and then thin to a stand. This is preferable, as the crop is more easily gathered and taken care of, and some cultivation can be given between the rows, which is also good.—[Fruit and Flower World.

For Gophers.

IF you do not find traps effectual, there are several other remedies. I soak a long strip of brown paper in a mixture of finely-ground red pepper and niter; when dry, ignite the strip and thrust it, while burning, into the burrow, the opening being closed. The fumes are destructive to moles. Make small pills of sweet corn, putting arsenic or strychnine into the center of them and dropping into the burrows. It is advisable if possible to handle these corn balls with a small-bladed knife or pincers that have been buried in the earth for a few hours, and not to touch the baits with the hands, as the mole is quick to scent a trap. It need not be said that it is inadvisable to use poison of there is a dog about the place whom you don't wish to kill.—'Country Gentleman.

A Crum of Comfort.

IMPORTANT concessions to California citrus fruit growers were granted by the railroad companies during a conference at San Francisco in August, at which time it was agreed that the smaller size cars in use for transporting oranges and lemons shall hereafter be packed with only 336 boxes, medium-sized cars with 362 boxes and the large cars to contain 384 boxes, instead of the regulation number of 362 boxes, which growers have heretofore arbitrarily been compelled to ship in all cars irrespective of capacity. The advantage of this ruling is apparent, as it will enable the fruit to carry better than when crowded in small cars, and in addition it will not be necessary to consign a large carload to markets incapable of caring for the contents to advantage.—[Orchard and Farm.

Early Turnips.

EARLY turnips will probably be an exception to the general rule, especially those growing on light land and in dry situations. A plentiful supply of moisture is absolutely essential for the development of the flowering properties of the plants; without it the stems become woody, the sap ceases to rise, the whole plant dries up prematurely, and the limited quantity of seed that has been formed is thin and of very poor quality. Instead of finding twenty good plump seeds in a pod we find only eight or ten, and fully one-third of these will be cleaned out in the dressing.

Rutabaga and some of the large field turnips develop more slowly, and it is not yet too late for these to be benefited. Beets and mangels love the dry weather when the nights are warm; at present they are lying low.

Japanese Horseradish.

WASABI, or Japanese horseradish, a new introduction of the Department of Agriculture, is not white, but of a delicate shade of green and has a freshness and sharpness unlike that of the horseradish of this country. Its cultural preferences resemble those of the ferns—moisture and shade.

On a Mountain Trail.

THE STORY OF "OLD SHELLY" AND THE CALIFORNIA LION.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Lennox family lived on a bee ranch away up among the mountains of Southern California. When they located on the little, rocky mesa and built their redwood cabin, the lumber for this, and the bee hives, with their few household goods, had to be carried in on pack animals. The steep mountain sides, that enclosed their holdings, were covered for the most part with tangled thickets of chaparral; but on the northern slopes many live-oak groves gave a perpetual greenness.

The sun rose late and sank early on the little home, and the shadows of the great mountains tempered the heat of the summer days; the sea breeze, which traversed fifty miles of heated valley, was anything but cooling when it reached the nook where the family of four lived.

When Mr. Lennox took his homestead, he hoped the oil claims, which were being rapidly located in the vicinity, would necessitate the building of a wagon road to and beyond him; with this hope he set to work to better the rough trail and otherwise improve his surroundings.

In a short time a road was constructed by the oil interests. It was blasted out at great expense along the precipitous mountain sides to within a half mile of the Lennox place. Here a deep and narrow gorge, called "the Devil's Gate," stopped operations, and the road debouched in another direction into less obstructed territory.

The trail which Mr. Lennox had labored so hard to make passable for his pack animals, and which had avoided the rocky gorge referred to, united with the new wagon road a mile farther on.

Daisy Lennox and her brother Fred had pursued their studies in a desultory fashion at home since they had removed so far from civilization, but Daisy was now 14 and begged hard to be allowed to attend the school in the valley; to this her parents at last consented.

Mrs. Lennox would probably never have given her permission to such an undertaking had it not been for Max, Daisy's young, fleet-footed bay pony, who was kind and trusty. Daisy was a fearless rider, and many a trip had they taken together after the cows, or up into the mountain fastnesses, and not without adventure.

Five miles is a long and lonely ride for a young girl to take twice daily, and it was not free from danger from many sources; but pioneers are noted for courage, so when the fall term began, Daisy Lennox was among the forty or more pupils whose names were enrolled on the register of the Epses-avenue school.

One day shortly after school opened, as the sun went behind the high mountain at the rear of the house, Fred, who had been restless all the afternoon, looked at the clock for the hundredth time, and remarked with studied carelessness:

"It's about 4 o'clock, and I'm goin' to meet Daisy—and say, ma, can't I take 'Old Shelly?'"

Mrs. Lennox turned from her work in surprise at the question. "No, indeed, son; you remember your father told you you could not go out alone with his gun until you were 12 years old."

Fred fidgeted in unrest at this denial of his request; he was no tease. His mother was about to question him, when he forestalled her inquiries with:

"Oh, pshaw, ma! I'm most 12 now; just in a few days will be my birthday; 'sides——" and he again hesitated and looked at his bare, brown feet, as if ashamed to meet his mother's gaze—" 'sides, it's reel nes'ry."

Annoyed at his unusual persistence, Mrs. Lennox sharply denied the request for the rifle and went on with her work. Fred passed slowly out of the house down the pathway. Suddenly he paused, turned and looked through the open door. He could see his mother as she bent above the churn. Her back was toward him.

"I got to have 'Old Shelly'—I just got to!" he whispered remorsefully, with a catch in his throat.

Turning quickly, he fairly rushed back along the pathway. He passed the house and stepped into another small building. There behind the door stood the coveted gun. He reached out and touched its shining surface, but recoiled as his fingers pressed the metal. It was Fred's first disobedience, and he trembled at his own daring. Those reared with nature are more keen to honor, fearing wrongdoing more than those in community life. We are so governed by the thought of those near us.

"Ma 'u'd lemme if she knew," he faltered, as if in answer to an accusing voice; "ma 'u'd lemme, and so 'u'd pa. But I dassent tell 'em, 'cause I promised Daise I'd keep mum."

As Fred stood debating with himself, he heard his mother cross the room, and fearing detection, he took the rifle from its resting place and slipped hurriedly past the rear of the house to a clump of sumac, which grew beside the path. With suffused face and fast-beating heart, he stopped here for a few moments, for the first time in his life a culprit, hiding from his mother.

Fred was a natural hunter, and the thought that he had possession of the gun, and his need of it, put his wrongdoing out of mind. He handled the bright treasure with skill, for his father had instructed him in its proper use, with the understanding that he would one day possess the weapon. As he walked along, he pointed it at many an imaginary wild beast. Soon he struck out into the trail over which he momentarily expected his sister to appear.

Fred had gone much farther than he had intended to do, and was hurrying along in great anxiety, when he caught the sound of Max's hoofs on the rocky trail. He was coming at a good pace, Fred could tell that, and for a moment his heart leaped into his mouth. "What if——" here Fred passed quickly around a sharp turn. For some distance the track lay comparatively straight. He could see Daisy, her hat resting at the back of her neck, with curls flying and a flushed face. She soon reined the pony up beside him.

"Is he coming, Daise—did you see him?" Fred gasped, grown pale at sight of his sister.

Daisy's color came and went. She became nonchalant at sight of her startled brother. She avoided his eager question by asking another:

"Say, Fred, did pa let you take the gun?"

Fred hung his head, and the girl grew more communicative. "Well, yes, I saw that old lion again this morning, down in Cool Crick Cañon. Max saw him, too, didn't you, old fellow?"

Max lay back one ear, and turned his dainty head toward his mistress. Daisy's courage was returning at sight of "Old Shelly" and her little brother.

"Look here, Daise, you'd ought to tell dad about seein' that mountain lion; I'm just scared to death all the time you're gone. And, say, don't tell ma I took 'Old Shelly,' will you, sis? She said I couldn't have it, but—I was so 'fraid the lion would chase you—I—I—just sneaked it.'

With a woman's quick wit at striking a bargain, Daisy hastily said: "I won't tell about 'Old Shelly' if you won't tell pa about the lion. He says lions are just old cowards, anyhow; says a little dog not more'n a foot high kept a mountain lion up a tree a whole day. But if ma knows about this lion, Mr. Fred, she won't let me go to school, and I just can't stay out, so there!"

Fred reluctantly accepted his sister's reasoning in silence, and getting up behind her, they were soon in sight of home.

The next morning, the brother and sister held a hurried conference while they saddled the pony; neither had slept well through the night, and Daisy was inwardly quaking, but outwardly resolved to take the ride which meant so much to her in the way of companionship and education.

When she sprang into the saddle and turned Max into the trail, the morning shadows lay heavy and dark at the foot of the rugged slopes. The thickets were dripping with moisture. A floating lake of fog in the narrow valley below her broke into fleecy pennants as she wound upward; these whitened and sprang aloft to catch the sunshine, which was just tinging the highest peaks.

In her delight at the beauty of untrammeled nature, Daisy almost forgot that there could be aught to fear. Max had ceased to pull at the bit, and nibbled an occasional leaf by the way. Twice he stopped short and sniffed inquiringly, but obediently walked on again at his mistress's bidding. Folds of the fog curtain swept along the ascending trail at intervals, and once Daisy thought she saw a tawny form through the mist, slinking from rock to rock, just ahead of her.

The girl's first impulse was to turn and retreat, but remembering that her father had said that California lions are cowards, she spoke sharply to the pony, who broke into a lope. The trail had now reached the wagon road, and it was easy to hasten onward. When she reached the spot where she thought she saw the enemy, a slide of earth and shale was trickling down the slope into the road. A sound of soft footfalls in the thicket told the girl that she had not been chasing phantoms.

She drew rein and listened. She could not tell whether the wild creature, whatever it might be, were still in front or had fallen back to the rear. She felt comparatively safe at this point, for she had frequently met workmen on the road at this hour, who were engaged at the oil wells, which were but a short distance behind her, and she felt sure the animal had gone up the mountain side again.

Daisy could now hear no sound from the thickets near, so giving Max his head, she loped along with little fear. She had not, however, taken the persistence of a hungry wild beast into account, and several times she caught glimpses of a pursuer. There were two cabins between her and the valley, but they were unoccupied at this season, being used by campers earlier in the year. The clearings about them gave her a sense of security, and she hurried on. Just ahead was a wide mesa on which was located one of the largest apiaries of this section. Usually, at this time of the year, the ranch was deserted, but the welcome sound of a hammer and voices proceeded from one of the packing-houses. Being now sure of help, the frightened girl drew rein and looked behind. There, just slipping over a ridge into the bushes, was the tawny form of her unwelcome companion along the mountain trail. It was a large cougar, or California lion.

Daisy was too worried at thought of the long homeward ride to make very creditable recitations in her lessons that day. She had almost decided to ask one of the neighbors to ride with her past the point where Cool Creek Cañon opened (for the huge cat had come upon her both times at this place,) but the jeers of some of her mates deterred her.

"Ha, ha!" laughed Ned Saunders. "Daise is a 'fraid cat. She saw a cottontail and called it a lion. She had tears in her eyes, and that made it look big. Bet I wouldn't be 'fraid to go the very darkest night all the way to Lennox's by myself! Huh! Daise's a 'fraid cat!"

Too timid to endure the chaffing of the school bully, too courageous to remain away from home overnight, thus subjecting her parents to worry and perhaps bringing danger to her little brother, Daisy Lennox saddled her pony and left the school ground. She reached the flat, where the apiary was, and passed beyond where the road entered the undergrowth. She peered eagerly on all sides, but neither saw nor heard anything to frighten her. She went slowly along, her courage rising; she began to think the animal had decided to stalk other game.

Suddenly Max leaped forward. His memory was good, and his ears were keener than those of his rider. Daisy instinctively glanced behind. There, slipping down the steep mountain side a few rods away, was the great puma. The animal saw that he was discovered, and flattened himself in the roadway, with the [illegible] concealment, but in full view.

Instantly the frightened girl and pony [illegible] their flight. The huge cat as quickly rose [illegible]. The road here was wide and level, but Daisy [illegible] the miles that lay between her and safety, [illegible] she had taken Fred's advice and told her [illegible] previous encounters with her dread [illegible] needed no urging, but fairly flew along. [illegible] few rods the start of the hungry brute, but Daisy [illegible] see he was gaining on the pony; she could [illegible] his hot breath, as he came bounding after them [illegible] leaps.

Now they were almost at the point where [illegible] curved away to the right, where the old abandoned [illegible] which her father had first constructed, entered it [illegible] left. A quarter mile farther beyond was the new [illegible] The first one was rougher, but it would shorten [illegible] tance she had to go. Which should she take? [illegible] cided for her by taking the bit in his teeth and [illegible] forward along the smooth road to the second trail.

The puma slackened his pace as he reached the [illegible] pathway. Daisy glanced back, and her courage returned. She thought: "He has given up the pursuit. [illegible] safe, Max!" she sobbed under her breath. But [illegible] had not relinquished his prey. This she soon [illegible] as she turned into the trail leading homeward, [illegible] mal bounded away through the first pathway.

Daisy's cheeks blanched. He was going the [illegible] way, and would meet them where the trails united, [illegible] cutting off their escape.

Daisy's cheeks blanched. He was going the [illegible] way, and would meet them where the trails united, [illegible] cutting off their escape.

"On, on, Max!" she screamed. The faithful [illegible] seeming to gather fresh energy from the agony and [illegible] spair in his mistress's voice, reached out in [illegible] strides. As the trails neared each other, the [illegible] girl strained her eyes for sight of her relentless [illegible] suer. Yes, there he was! She could catch glimpses [illegible] his tawny hide, where the undergrowth was thinner. She could see, too, that he was still a trifle in the [illegible] his moment of indecision at the turn in the road [illegible] given Max a small advantage. If only she might [illegible] the fork, just a few horse lengths in the lead, and [illegible] did not fail her, they might still be saved.

On leaped the panther. On rushed the pony. [illegible] sides were heaving, but his ears stood erect, and [illegible] knew that he was equal to his task. If only he [illegible] keep the panther in the rear! Max, too, had seen [illegible] lion, when his mistress gave vent to her terror in [illegible] one agonized scream. Then he bent to the task [illegible] reaching the point where the trails joined, with almost human understanding of the desperate chance he [illegible] taking. Now his ears were laid flat in anger. He [illegible] once swerved or slackened his pace. On, on, he flew. [illegible] might mean death for the faithful creature, but he [illegible] doing his duty, and he meant to win.

Suddenly Daisy remembered that the other trail [illegible] a curve to avoid some great boulders just before it [illegible] with the one over which Max was speeding. She [illegible] lose sight of the brute for one instant, but she knew [illegible] must slacken his headlong course. Even if this [illegible] ever so little, it would give the pony another [illegible] advantage. From this point the way was comparatively straight and unobstructed, and she again grew hopeful.

"One moment more, only one, and we can make [illegible] she sobbed through her parched throat. A few [illegible] there, Max is on the home trail now!

But at that instant there came a fearful impact. [illegible] Max, giving a cry almost human, was flung to one [illegible] nearly unseating his rider.

Daisy glanced back, as the quivering pony [illegible] himsef and again bounded onward. There was the [illegible] comfited puma, just regaining his feet. He had [illegible] upon the flank of the fleeing pony, but had missed [illegible] hold by a hand's breadth. He had plunged backward [illegible] the ground, his momentum flinging him headlong. [illegible] marks of his cruel claws showed red on the pony's [illegible] ing flank; the way over which they sped was [illegible] with the blood of the little hero.

In that one glance backward, as she clasped her pony's neck, Daisy saw more than the enraged puma. There [illegible] the side of the trail, standing like a statue, upon a [illegible] boulder, was her little brother Fred. He was partly [illegible] the shadow of the overhanging rocks, but the [illegible] glinted on the bright barrel of "Old Shelly," and he [illegible] holding a steady bead on the snarling cat. The [illegible] walked deliberately toward the young sportsman, [illegible] ing his tail from side to side, incensed at his recent [illegible] ure. This sight filled Daisy with new terror. She [illegible] lost the rein when the lion had leaped upon the [illegible] and had no means of stopping Max's flight. But she [illegible] nearing home and help. On the still air, clear and [illegible] tinct, a shot rang out, then another, and still another.

Mr. Lennox, missing his rifle, and divining [illegible] what the cause, had started out along the trail, [illegible] suit of the young hunter, intending to administer [illegible] rebuke to his son. At sight of him, the tired [illegible] halted, and the girl, with hurried explanation, [illegible] him with the peril to which her brother was [illegible] She turned the jaded pony, and the three hurried [illegible] the spot from which she had so recently fled.

In a few moments they came in sight of the rocky [illegible] ress, which had stood between Fred and the angry [illegible] There, in the dusty trail, lay the great creature. [illegible] not move as Max neared him, shying and snorting, [illegible] ering at remembrance of his narrow escape from [illegible] cruel jaws.

But where was Fred? Anxiously they hastened [illegible] the pile of boulders where Daisy had last seen him [illegible] the gun. They called, but no answer came back [illegible] except the echo of their voices from the overhanging cliffs. They were filled with apprehension. [illegible] they passed the ugly carcass of the dead puma, [illegible] Lennox climbed to the top of the huge pile of [illegible] had held his only son, struggling against the [illegible] he should find a torn and bleeding corpse.

Yes, there was Fred, but his eyes were closed [illegible] by beside him. Tenderly the anxious father lifted the slight body and laid it on the grassy roadside. A body examination disclosed no injuries. Fred had killed the cat, the strain had proven more than he could endure, and he had simply succumbed to fright after the danger was over. The young sportsman soon opened his eyes and struggled feebly to a sitting posture.

"There—where is he, pa? Where is the lion? Say, pa, I—I—took 'Old Shelly' when ma said I couldn't, because the lion chased Daisy, and—and—I just had to! Did you get the gun, pa?" Fred's voice trailed away into silence, and his head dropped back into his sister's lap.

Mr. Lennox returned to the rocks, and brought from a crevice the rifle that had fallen from the nerveless hand at the last shot. He brought the shining weapon and placed it beside the trembling boy. There was a suspicious huskiness in the father's voice when he said, gently stroking the limp hand:

"My son, you have worthily won 'Old Shelly' today, and the gun is yours." M. E. DUDLEY.

NEW ANAESTHETICS.

MARVELOUS POWER POSSESSED BY SCOPOLAMINE AND STOVAINE.

[Philadelphia North American:] Back from Europe only last week with an entirely new anaesthetic, stovaine, Dr. W. Wayne Babcock, chief of the surgical staff of the Samaritan Hospital, has performed, with its aid, a remarkably successful operation. He also made successful use of the new anaesthetic, scopolamine, and under conditions that would have made ether or any other anaesthetic extremely dangerous to the success of the operation and the endurance of the patient.

Injection of stovaine is made through the lumbar region of the back into the spinal cord, which cuts off all communication between the upper and lower portions of the body, and, in reality, acts like a plug in a telephone switchboard. With the upper part of the body in natural condition, the brain working and the patient thoroughly conscious, the lower, or cut-off, portions of the body are as so much lifeless timber. The patient is unable to control a single muscle below the dead line, and has no sensation whatever.

In the case of the patient operated upon, a painful chronic sinus and varicose veins were removed. The injection caused what is technically known as spinal anaesthesia. The patient did not know the injection was being made, since the surgeons froze the skin of the back.

During the operation the patient felt no pain, and had he been lying in a different position could have seen the surgeons at work, though he would have had no sensation of pain, and might have told stories to the enjoyment of the operators.

A previous use of stovaine was made at the time of an operation upon a Russian Jew several days ago for the removal of a large tumor.

Excellent results followed the use of scopolamine. The patient was one suffering with a cancer of the face, which extended down over the neck and included a portion of the mouth. His constitution had been weakened by his long illness, and the use of ether or another anaesthetic would have been dangerous.

Having once been under the influence of ether the patient dreaded this drug, and readily consented to the use of scopolamine.

He was given three injections of scopolamine, one hundredth of a grain at each time. The injections were made at twenty-minute intervals.

Two hours were required for the operation, and after it had been successfully performed and the patient awakened, as though from a natural sleep, for a time the surgeons could not make him believe that all was over. Yesterday he was resting easily, with none of the after-effects of ether, and practically feeling as well as before the operation was performed.

THE LAND OF THE WEST.

I love thee, O beautiful land of the West!
Grand temple of Nature, I bow at thy shrine,
And worshiping there with the purest, the best,
My soul floats away to my Maker divine.

Thy plains spread afar like Eternity's sea,
How boundless they seem in their grand solitude;
No whisper, no echo of sorrow or glee,
May rise through the air, or on their silence intrude.

Yet, silent they lie, untrodden by man,
Unscathed by his greatness, untouched by his art.
O glorious thought! nor sorrow nor pain
Have left there one trophy, or broken one heart.

Thy mountains that lift their proud peaks to the skies,
Then spurning the earth with its toils and its cares;
Crowned monarchs, no dynasty ever can rise
Thy sway to usurp or thy glory to wear.

God formed thee for power, great, beautiful land,
Protected by mountain, and ocean, and plain;
Blessed and ordained thee securely to stand,
Till earth and its glories no longer remain.

Land of my worship, stretch out thy strong arms,
And welcome the stranger thy future to share;
Proclaim thy wealth and unveil all thy charms,
Disclose all thy treasures so varied and rare.

Our pulses are stirred, the cold chains are lifted
That held us apart from the warm tints of life;
No dreamers are we, the shadows have shifted,
And shown us the world with its glory and strife.
HELYAR LOCKYER.

The Barton Family.

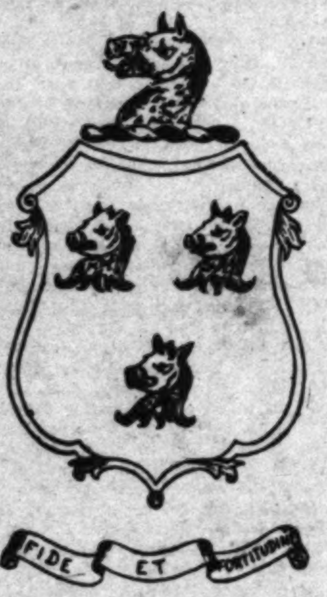
THE NAME WORTHILY BORNE BY WIDELY SCATTERED FAMILY.

By a Special Contributor.

DEFENDER of the town, is the meaning of Barton, derived from bar, a barrier or defense, and ton or town. Tun was Anglo-Saxon for a plot of ground inclosed by a hedge, or the demesne or inclosures attached to a manor. In Lancashire is the manor of Barton, dating from the twelfth century, when the name appears as De Barton.

Toward the end of the sixth century five brothers in Lancashire decided that not only was Lancashire too small, but England not quite large enough, to hold them all, so one went to Scotland, where the name is known as Bartan; one to Ireland; another to France, where the name is Bartin; the fourth to Southern England, where it appears as Burton. In 1632, the younger brother, Marmaduke, came to Essex county, Mass. By 1650 there were at least four separate heads of families here; Christopher in Virginia, Roger at Rye, N. Y., and Rufus in Rhode Island. Edward, supposed to be son of Marmaduke, was the founder of the New Hampshire branch of the family. All proved a race of sturdy pioneers, and were volunteers in every war, justifying their name, defender of towns. They filled posts of honor and trust, and intermarried with well-known colonial families, that of Governor Robert Treat for one. Margaret, daughter of James Barton, when she married Robert Calif, received as her portion from her father a warehouse on Boston Wharf, Boston.

The family of Central New York descends from David, who helped to build up the town of Hanover. The story is told of him that, after much opposition, he gained permission to put up a stove in the church, the bigoted maintaining that the fire of religious zeal should keep the congregation warm. The ladies were supposed to be protected by furs and little footstoves, the men kept on their heavy coats, and the minister preached in mittens, often decorated with fringe. Forgetting himself and gesticulating freely, an audible snicker from some of the younger members brought round the "tithing" man, who touched the transgressor on the shoulder with the long tithing pole.



BARTON

No more thrilling story of Revolutionary times is recorded than that of Lieut. William Barton. He came over from England with Gage, and was at Lexington and Bunker Hill, but with little heart for the side for which he fought, his sympathies growing in favor of the colonies. When Boston was evacuated he vowed that he would espouse the cause of liberty. When the Hudson River divided the armies Barton seized his first desperate opportunity. On his way to cross over to the Continental army he met a British officer, who commanded him to return. A hand-to-hand conflict ensued, the young hero receiving a sword cut across his face, the scar lasting for life. Finally he dismounted the officer, captured his sword, and with it between his teeth, wounded as he was, swam to the other side to Fort Lee, which Washington was about to give up to begin his retreat through New Jersey. According to tradition, the young soldier asked to see Washington, who remembered his father, the two having fought together at Fort Duquesne. He gave him a pass in his own handwriting. William Barton's fight for freedom is made the subject of one of the strongest pictures of Willard, the painter of Revolutionary scenes.

The lieutenant's love story is as romantic as his war record is picturesque and stirring. Attending a merry-making near the end of the war—tall, shy, awkward and disfigured by his scar—he took no part in the game, which was "drop the handkerchief." 'Margaret Henderson, the belle of the evening, vivacious and coquettish, singled him out, and, leaving the ring, threw the handkerchief full in his face. The lieutenant was a brave man; though taken by surprise, he rallied his forces, jumped up and caught her half way round the ring. The sequel? He proposed the next day, and they were married two weeks later. He had been considered a hopeless old bachelor, his age being 25.

There is another war story of Gen. William of Rhode Island. He captured Prescott in his bed, for which he received the thanks of Congress and a sword. The Overton House, near Newport, where the famous capture was made, still stands. The general married Rhoda Carver, descendant of John Alden, of the Mayflower. A town in Vermont is named for Gen. Barton. He was engaged in a lawsuit, and judgment being given against him, he was nominally a prisoner for debt for fourteen years, or until Lafayette's visit to America in 1824, when he paid the judgment, but without Barton's knowledge, and set him free. Whittier's poem, "The Prisoner for Debt," is said to have been suggested by this experience.

William was a famous name in Revolutionary records. There was a Capt. William from Pennsylvania, and a fifer of the same name, and several from Massachusetts; also a Capt. William, from New Jersey. The latter's diary, covering part of the war time, is preserved by the New Jersey Historical Society.

The arms reproduced is argent, three boars' heads sable, armed, or. Crest, a boars head gules, couped armed, argent. Motto, Fide et Fortitudine—With faith and courage. This is the arms of the Bartons of Barton, and is given in the Lancashire Visitation, 1567. It is what is called a canting, or punning of arms, although it is rather far-fetched. The use of the boar's head seems to suggest the derivation of Barton from Boarton. The boar's head has been assumed as a crest by warriors and huntsmen since the time of Beowulf, the mighty hunter. Different crests are assumed by different branches of the family—near a score and ten. An acorn and an oak branch by some of the Lancashire family; the Norfolk branch, a dragon's head and a griffin's head, and the motto, Fortis et Veritas; the Kent family, an owl ducally gorged and a wolf's head erased ermine; the Scotch family Bartan or Bartane, a tent, azure, flag gules. THE STATE OF ST. MARKS.

PROGRESS OF WORK ON THE RESTORATION OF THE CATHEDRAL.

[Venice Correspondence of London Post:] Anyone visiting Venice at the present time and seeing church after church invested with scaffolding might be tempted to form very pessimistic views about the stability of the City of the Lagoons. Special alarm has been expressed as to the condition of St. Mark's, and I have therefore thought it desirable to go over that fabric with an architect of recognized eminence and to have his opinion as to the condition of the noble church.

The whole of the west end of the building is now occupied by scaffolding of the most massive description, which goes up to within nearly six feet of the roof and has been erected at a cost of nearly £1500. The cracks in the mosaic are very noticeable when one ascends by a series of ladders to the highest platform of this scaffolding, and it is calculated that eighteen months must elapse before that portion of the church has been put into a proper state of repair. The work is naturally of a very delicate character, and the men employed must be skilled and well paid. Fortunately, like the workmen engaged in the excavation of the Roman Forum, they are keenly interested in their work; and, being Venetians, are proud of Venice and her magnificent past.

The rise of certain parts of the floor, which led to a person breaking his leg over a projecting fragment of the paving some months ago, has necessitated relaying in a few places. This has, however, been done with the utmost care; it led to the discovery of a tomb belonging to a very early period and of traces of old foundations. To level the floor would be an impossibility, architecturally, besides being an act of vandalism unworthy of a Venetian.

It is not considered that the present cracks in St. Mark's are due to the effects of the fall of the Campanile. There have been in operation for centuries certain causes which have slowly but surely weakened the structure. As short a distance as five feet below the floor there is water, which has had a bad influence on the foundations in the course of ages. Worse still, the salt air of Venice, especially during the winter, when cold mists are prevalent, has a destructive effect on all ironwork. The Venetian republic would not, it is true, allow any iron bars to be placed as supports in a visible position in St. Mark's; but along the galleries are numbers of iron fastenings, put there by Sansovino when he executed repairs at the church. A further cause of the cracks is the vast weight of the materials superadded to the original structure when the church was richly decorated and altered, without any increase in the strength of the foundations.

The question of expense is not serious. During the Austrian occupation St. Mark's enjoyed an annual donation of £2400, and this liability was taken over by the Italian government in 1866 and continued since then. As the work of repairs must of necessity proceed slowly, and long preliminary studies were required, so far the cost has been relatively small. Unforeseen cracks may, of course, render the task of repairing the building more arduous, for Venetan edifices are full of surprises. My informant does not, however, share the view expressed in some quarters that St. Mark's is doomed. The present plan of repairs will, he thinks, save it.

Extensive works are also going on at the Church of San Giovanni e Paolo; the side of the Doge's Palace adjoining the Bridge of Sighs is shored up by means or huge planks and beams; the campanili of both Sta. Maria Formosa and San Giorgia Maggiore are enveloped in scaffolding; and that of Burano is still rent and unrepaired. In short, Venice is in the hands of the workmen, and some years must elapse before she emerges from her crutches and splints.

Kingdom Come.

LONG AND GHASTLY VIGIL IN EASTERN SUDAN.

By a Special Contributor.

LIEUT. THORNE and Trooper Smith found themselves stranded and helpless among the sand and scrub in the Eastern Sudan; a wilderness broken here and there by low bushes. The faint blast of a bugle, which drifted down to them on the evening air, intensified the solitude through the suggestion of safety beyond reach.

A few days earlier they were on a troopship at the mouth of the Red Sea. The 50th Hussars had completed their term of service in India, and were going home. They almost felt the strong salt of the English Channel smite their cheeks, and soften the stifling heat of the furnace. A signal from Aden arrested the rhythmic throb of the engines. The troops were paraded on deck to receive a message. Osman Digna had broken out again, and the improvised British force required to be strengthened. They were ordered to land at an open beach below Suakin to join in the attack on the Dervish villages. As history records, the action was fought successfully, and the Dervishes were scattered, for a while, to their mountain strongholds.

The cavalry had been searching the recesses of a valley, and were leisurely trotting back to camp in the afternoon with a flock of sheep as their only booty, when the alarm sounded; for the plain, a solitude when they crossed it in the morning, was now alive with skirmishers. The charge was given, and they swept twice through the bush; the enemy crouching under cover, cutting at the horses as they passed. It was difficult to find the elusive foe; more difficult and dangerous to discover the fallen bodies of their comrades, or, indeed, to satisfy themselves that the few riderless horses bolting around meant loss of life. In some instances the unhorsed trooper managed to recover his mount, or clambered behind another saddle. It was by chance that during the last effort to clear the bush Trooper Smith had lighted upon Lieut. Thorne in a gully to which he had crawled for shelter when bruised and sprained by the fall of his horse. Smith dismounted, and while leaning over the young officer, suffered the rein to slip from his arm. His own horse, fidgety and excited, broke away at once, and galloped after the tail of the force.

It was wearing toward evening. There was no means of attracting attention without bringing a stray Dervish upon them. Provided they were able to hide close for the night, the ground would be searched for the wounded in the morning.

The green, gold, and violets of the sky deepened to dark purple. With the passing of the sun the earth suddenly grew cold. The men drew closer to each other. They shared their biscuits, and emptied the officer's flask. It was dangerous for both of them to sleep. Only patience could serve, and they beguiled the long watch by talking in low tones.

"Deuced bad luck that Dandy put his foot in a hole when we were so nearly through the business, though it is always like that in war. A hundred bullets will dodge you, and you get pitched on your head on parade."

"Yes, sir," replied Smith, "but the luck is against the cavalry. Those infantry fellows are picked up, but the horses sweep on so fast that you can never count your loss, and our poor chaps are left to die."

"Never mind, Smith, there are two of us. Meanwhile, don't 'sir' me. We two are alone facing death. God knows how soon. We are just comrades, no more, no less. When we are back in camp, if you don't salute me, then I will have you brought to the drum head, you rascal."

"Very well. It is a bit rough on us both to be caught on the road home, and sent to fight savages who don't take prisoners, but shout their gibberish prayers over the wounded and stick 'em."

"The colonel told us it was a great honor," put in Thorne slyly.

"Yes, and we all shouted for the Queen and the flag, but blame me if the women and children were not snivelling and crying when we got down below."

"Come, there is something in it, Smith, the honor and glory of it all."

"I suppose there is, but what does it come to? A square of silk or bunting crossed by bars of colors, and you would sell your soul for it, or soak it with your blood. My impression is, lieutenant, we are not Christians at all at heart, but just the same as any idol fellow. I don't see much difference, one fights for an image, and another for a flag."

"It is not the bunting, Smith, as you very well know. See what is caught in the folds of that flag—the honor of the nation, the history of England. Think of it; planted in every part of the world; in arctic and torrid zone alike, the symbol of our little islands, and their laws, and——"

"Yes, I know all about it, sir, but just at present I would swap a great deal of the honor and glory for another quart of that muddy water they gave us at Trinkitat with no more for drinking and washing before we had fought the enemy and captured the wells.

"Never mind, Smith, never mind, we will have a rare feast when we get back to camp. If there is a bottle to be had in all Suakim, by Jove we will divide it, share and share alike, man!"

"Go to blazes with you!" cried Smith, pitching a pebble into the darkness.

"What's up there?" said his companion.

"Only one of those ferrety wild things which rummage after dead bodies; outlandish creatures made to match the fuzzy wuzzies, their friends. I thought I heard a mumling movement; then I saw a pair of green eyes, but he has gone. They are awful cowards. Hark! hear him give tongue."

For a little while they were silent. In the abstract, it does not matter what becomes of us when we are once dead, but it is difficult to avoid contrasting the funeral march, and the final volley, with the tearing and crunching of the scavengers of the desert.

"I borrowed a florin from old Robinson. He'll be wild when he finds I don't come back to pay him." Smith chuckled softly to himself at the idea of Robinson's discomfiture.

"By the by, Smith, that reminds me that I have a bit on 'Batswing' with Capt. Bennett. If you survive, just look out the paper, there's a good chap, when the Lincolnshire is run, you know. Ask the colonel to be kind enough to collect the bet, or see it is paid, as the case may be. He's the right sort, and will interest himself, I know, in clearing up my affairs."

"It is hard upon us young ones to die in cold blood, even for the flag," continued Smith in a ruminating voice. "Get shot in action and you don't feel it."

"That's true," replied his companion. "Even if you linger, pain and fever will not leave you much thought for other people. There's my mother, Smith, think of her, not so very old, too. I am her only son. She will mourn for me for years. She will wake in the night crying out, listening to the howl of these savages; hearing the whistle of the spear finishing with a thud. Ah! it will be worse for her than for me."

"Well, sir—lieutenant—I mean, it has not come to that yet. We may be lucky enough to get off. At any rate, we will take our fate together."

"No, no, old boy, you will stand by me to the morning, not a moment later. When its light you get away. If you bring them back, all's well. If not, there are a dozen cartridges left, and there's my sword. I will face death standing, even on one leg. Tell them that I died game."

"I will never leave you, sir, but don't take it so much to heart. It will be a bad enough breakfast when it comes; we don't want to cut it up into too many courses. Ah! it's a tighter place we are in than we expected when we started soldiering."

"We took it for better or worse, Smith, and we won't brag about it. It wasn't for the good of our country that we started, but to enjoy a jolly open life, eh! man. We were to get boon companionship; a bit of discipline; some excitement; a fine profession; with a dose of active service, and a reputable pensioned age. It has become grim earnest for us. If we have lost the stake e will keep our honor."

"Put it in your own way, sir, but I enlisted for a different reason. To tell the honest truth, I quarrelled with my sweetheart, because she took up with a policeman. A pretty little slip of a girl she is, too. When I had taken the shilling to spite her, I found that the policeman was a married man, and it was all a mistake. She lives down Mile End; a dear little girl, chestnut hair, and gray blue eyes, with such a saucy turn of her head. Many a time I have bussed it up with her to Hyde Park on Sunday afternoon just to show her off among the swells, as neat and dapper a lady bird as any of them. I wrote her that we were coming home, and 'I was quite well as it left me, hoping that it would find her the same.' We are not great hands at letter writing, she and I, but she is honest and means to wait for me. I was looking to see her at Tilbury in the black hat with the tea rose——"

"Look here, Smith, this is my pocket-book, do you see—the tissue paper. There is a gray curl of hair; curl, that is my mother's. Another, a black curl, that is somebody else's. Ask the colonel to send them home with the photograph. No, I will take out the hair, and slip it under my shirt, but keep the portrait, I don't want the girl to be stared at by those grinning beasts. Never grieve, man, it will come all right somehow, somewhere else."

"That's all very well," grumbled the trooper, "but it's rather cold comfort. I should like to have had a mouthful of this world before trying the next. The chaplain read out that there was to be neither marriage or giving in marriage. Three little rooms for me down Mile End way, with geraniums in the window; the kettle just on the boil; Mary getting tea; the kiddies on the floor; but there——"

There was something like a choke in the lieutenant's voice before he replied. "You and I don't look for crowns and tambourines, but somehow I believe we shall have another chance, and be no worse off than if we hadn't enlisted and got shot, or stuck, before we were thirty."

Smith was quiet for a minute, and then said with an effort: "I ain't much good at the chaplain's talk, but I have tried to go straight. It's not hard to deal justly with the colonel, God bless him, but to keep even with the sergeant is another matter. I haven't shirked orders; have bucked up the weaker lot, and prepared to face death like a man. Sometimes I have mistaken my conscience for my liver, but I don't set up as a model."

Thorne felt for his companion's arm in the dark, and caught at his wrist. "It's my mother who is about me in these moments, speaking to me as she did when I was a lad; her arms around my neck; her breath on my cheek. It is her prayer which is my religion. To whom it goes I don't know; I was going to say I don't care, so long as she is praying for me."

"It is hard, sir, for a man with no learning to teach a gentleman like you, but it seems to me that there must be Somebody, somewhere, a source of it all, even of the love of our mothers and wives."

"It may be so," answered the other man, "or it may be all pure imagination; a God, the big shadow of a man like ourselves. Why should we make believe, it can do no good. What skill have we to find a pathway through those stars above us to another world? If so, where is it; where are the sign posts; how do we go?"

"Yes, sir, it is very puzzling. I have tri out by myself, and got confused, but here than the horses we ride. Understanding measuring them and weighing them, as I men do, it seems to me that it is as much a a man to have got into the world and to to get out of it again. At any rate something to me——"

A breeze swept through the bushes behind made them start. The cold of the night had alyzing hand upon their courage. The began to throb painfully, and Thorne caught as he shifted his position.

"This is almost unendurable, waiting in death," he exclaimed. "Better go and face Leaning on your shoulder I could jump paces at a time, and then rest. We might tedious laps to get a mile nearer safety."

The other man grumbled a negative. "No, chance is in lying close until someone were in the open we are bound to be discovered were a stronger man I would carry you, but much bigger than I. We could not make half fore morning."

"You are right, man, and the effort would strength, leaving nothing for the crisis."

They fell silent again, but the night spoke dred voices. Shivering gasps of wind harried and wandered away to be lost in the desert. low murmurs blending into a continuous hum, earth were crooning herself to sleep—lost in locity. The stars, brilliant points, flashed in the heavens above them.

"Lieutenant, I know you will do something I have no photograph, no locks of hair, but are. This is the last letter I had from her. write on the back of it: 'God bless you and always.' I said I'll write, but I must light up

"Don't be a fool," interposed Thorne, "the betray us."

"It's quite safe, I'll hold it in my cap so. see. There's nice handwriting for you:

"Look out, Smith," said "horne hoarsely, someone moving around."

His companion nipped the match, and gripped volver. The two men listened for a moment. sound like stalking footsteps. Once or twice it and then the darkness swallowed it.

As the night waned, sleep laid a soft, heavy them. The nervous tension relaxed. Though were still aware of their danger, the desire for the of unconsciousness overpowered alarm. Sleep they for however short a time. They would lose for a minute or two; droop against each other, forward; revive to see the situation in a fog; ity with mirage; hear voices of their comrades to them; the clatter of the camp mess; men their work carelessly whistling. Suddenly Smith cried out. "They are upon us, tenant. Cover them with the revolver, so. Is your steady? Let me have it; the pain has worn you Mind the spears. See! that fellow behind has a bush. Here goes, I'll keep the two last cartridge they ever made prisoners?"

"Good heart, man!" exclaimed Thorne.

"That's all right," said the other. "Who poor beggars they have found?"

A DISCHARGE FROM PRESIDENT JOHNSON—A CENTENARIAN.

By a Special Contributor.

ONE President of the United States served as a company officer while he occupied the White House, and only one. That was Andrew Johnson. A majority of the other Presidents had been either company, regimental, corps, or army commanders previous to their election.

When we look back and behold how well the country prospered while the so-called "military despots" were at the head of the government, may we not imbibe the notion that there could come to the republic a greater misfortune than to have a soldier for President?

Washington commanded from a company to all of the armies then in existence in the colonies. Madison, Monroe and Jefferson were company commanders in war or in time of peace. Jackson, Harrison, Polk, Taylor, Pierce, Lincoln, Grant, Hayes, Arthur, Harrison, McKinley and Roosevelt commanded all the way from small detachments up to the combined armies of the republic, previous to becoming President.

Andrew Johnson was a brigadier-general of volunteers, before he was elected Vice-President, and, as already stated, ranked, in one respect, all of his predecessors and successors, for while he was commander-in-chief of the army and navy, he assumed duties incumbent upon the commander of a single company.

How did it happen?

Corporal Lorenzo W. Cooke, of the Thirteenth United States Infantry, was on duty in Washington at the time his term of enlistment expired. His company was in Kansas, hundreds of miles from Fort Leavenworth, and it was out of the question to join, except he went with a large body of soldiers, and at much expense, for the country was infested with ugly Indians.

The young man, who had been a soldier through the war and a good one, was in much trouble. In order to secure his discharge and final statements, somebody must be found who was willing to act as his company commander, otherwise he could draw no pay. With his company and its officers more than a thousand miles away, in a country occupied by a cunning and merciless enemy, the youngster found himself in a most perplexing position. He consulted the Paymaster-General, in the hope that he might secure pay due and have the papers approved by the company commander at a later date. The Paymaster-General informed him that that was impossible and told him it would be necessary to have his discharge and final statements signed by his company commander.

The youngster was not easily discouraged.

He had other resources.

He would consult the President of the United States.

Soon after 9 o'clock, one morning, the corporal, still a soldier, was ushered into the President's room and told his story, winding up with a request that the President sign his discharge. The papers, including the discharge certificate, had been made out and verified in the War Department. The President smiled and invited him to be seated, and then looked the documents over carefully and told the boy that he guessed, if he signed them, the Paymaster-General would give him his money. Without further ceremony he wrote, "Andrew Johnson, commanding company," on the discharge and final statements.

The Paymaster-General recognized the right of the President of the United States to act as a company commander, and paid the young soldier, greatly to his delight and peace of mind.

I have just read that discharge, the only one of its kind in the world.

It is in the possession of that corporal of the long ago. He is now Lieut.-Col. Lorenzo W. Cooke, of the Twentieth United States Infantry, who has been on duty in Milwaukee, the past two years, as recruiting officer. It is yellow with age and bad treatment, but it is legible, the signature of the President showing as plainly as when it was written, in 1865.

The bad treatment occurred in Texas, thirty-five years ago, in a cloudburst, which caused the death of a number of soldiers and the destruction of much property. The trunk in which the discharge was kept was carried from camp and not found until a month later. The discharge, with the rest of the contents, was water-soaked during that time, but, being parchment, was not ruined. It is one of Col. Cooke's most highly-prized possessions.

Not long after his discharge by President Johnson, Cooke joined a company in Kansas as a second lieutenant, having been commissioned September 21, and two years later was made first lieutenant. He reached the rank of lieutenant-colonel January 24, 1904. Wisconsin is much interested in this distinguished officer of the regular army, whose record is without a blemish. Though he is a native of New York, his people settled near Janesville when he was eleven years old, moved to Portland, Dodge county, soon afterward. His father died when he was thirteen. When he was given permission to volunteer, and was enrolled as a private in the Twenty-seventh Wisconsin, 25, 1862. He was soon made a coroporal. In of that year, having decided that he would join the Thirteenth United States Infantry, whose colonel was Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, he was discharged as a volunteer. Col. Cooke was an officer of the Third Infantry more than thirty years, going to the Twenty-sixth upon his promotion to major, four years ago.

The oldest man in the Denver Grand Army parade, on the ocassion of the last national encampment, was William R. Taylor, better known as "Uncle Billy" Taylor, who for more than fifty years was a resident of La Crosse, Wis. Mr. Taylor was born May 10, 1806. He is in full possession of his faculties, stands as straight and marches as firmly as a young, well-trained regular; walked three miles to join the Wisconsin delegation and then marched nearly three miles before passing the reviewing officer. No man in the line made a more soldierly appearance. He did not seem greatly fatigued at the end of the day's work. All of this, for a man not far from one hundred years of age, seems quite marvelous. He has the promise of a good many more years, judging from his appearance and the condition of his health, which he says was never better.

Mr. Taylor engaged in fighting Indians in the Northwest, previous to the Black Hawk War, in which he served as a volunteer. At one time during that war, he served briefly under Capt. Abraham Lincoln. While in the regular army he served at Fort Crawford when that post was commanded by Gen. Zach. Taylor. He also served in the Mexican War under Gen. Taylor. Very soon after the Civil War began he enlisted in the Fourteenth Wisconsin, serving four years, and was with his regiment in all of the battles in which it was engaged. During the Civil War he fought in battles where Gen. Grant was the commander, among them Shiloh. For a brief time in the Mexican War his command was attached to a brigade commanded by Gen. Franklin Pierce, and at another time a brigade commanded by Col. Jefferson Davis, from which it will be seen that this man, still up-to-date, and apparently in the full vigor of life, was a uniformed servant under the command of five officers who subsequently served as President—Taylor, Pierce, Lincoln and Grant, Presidents of the United States, and Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy. What other living or dead soldier has such a record?

For Dog's Sake.

A STORY OF JOHN RAWLINS AND HIS BIG FOXHOUND.

By a Special Contributor.

"SPEAKING of the affection that a dog has for his master—and sometimes it is deep-rooted and lasting—reminds me of John Rawlins and his big foxhound, Bruce," said one of the old settlers of Los Angeles to me while we were both seated on a bench in Eastlake Park, a few days since.

"Now you hold," he continued, "that a dog's affection for man is not to be compared to man's affection for dog; for one is brutish, inhuman and caninish, the other human, usually civilized and educated; yet I say I've known where dog would die for man and where man would just as blindly, just as willingly die for dog. Old Rawlins was of that type; so was his dog Bruce, only Bruce never had the chance to prove to the world the depth of his affection; and Rawlins did.

"It was in the early sixties that it happened, and Rawlins at that time was known as the best hunter of Los Angeles; and that his dog Bruce was to blame for it. Yet it is not always a fault; not always to be damned as cruel, and brutish simply because a man goes off in the wild to hunt, and I say if hunt, then hunt right. Rawlins hunted right; always brought venison home; and innumerable stories of Bruce's prowess, usually not mentioning any of his own, except to say, "put a bullet in the heart," or "threw the old gun over, and then—meat." But once I remember Rawlins came home, unsuccessful. He told of wounding a buck, such as he had never seen before; one whose track was as a calf's, and whose antler spread was like an elk. Rawlins said he had wounded the buck and was forced to leave the trail, after having followed it for three days, on account of his grub giving out, and Bruce becoming footsore. Rawlins that time looked thin and worried, his hands were sore where he had held Bruce's chain when the dog had become impatient to be off ahead of the man. But the dog, too, was badly used up. He was thin, looked tired, and walked with a very perceptible limp.

"But Rawlins, after a few days' rest, started again for the buck. He took a good supply of grub, and was to be gone, he said, until the deer was dead.

"It seemed that Rawlins had trailed the wounded deer in a complete circle from Buckhorn around San Gabriel, and the Tejunga, passing on the return just north of the brow of the hill where he had first shot at the deer. His idea now was to station himself near the brow, turn Bruce on the trail, and leave the dog to make the long circle with the buck. Bruce was footsore, but had braced up much on the new grub and was easily good for the chase. And early in the morning Rawlins showed him the track, which was now somewhat old, and Bruce was off. At first he traveled very slowly, carrying the scent with difficulty, baying only intermittently, yet deep and sharp. After two hours he reached the divide, and Rawlins could hear him baying, faintly, yet more regularly, and his heart thrilled, for he even then saw, or seemed to see, the buckskin, and the magnificent antlers, and Bruce back in Los Angeles. That night Rawlins slept. The next morning it was raining, and he kept under the sheltering rock. No Bruce was heard that day, and toward evening, when it ceased to rain, Rawlins shot a spike and cooked some venison. When he had lighted his pipe, he muttered half aloud: "Bruce and the buck get to camp tomorrow sure, and I'll be glad to see them both."

"In the morning the sun was shining and the ground was fresh; every track was plain. "What a day for Bruce to hurry him along. He'll be here at 5 o'clock." Then Rawlins pulled out his watch, calculated the hours, and placed it upon the rock in front of him.

"At 1 o'clock Rawlins thought he heard a baying to the north; and soon he knew the voice of Bruce. Rawlins smiled, and when he heard the voice grow more distinct, and once, one great deep bay, which meant that Bruce was close on, Rawlins jumped, waved his hat and said: "My dog, he can be depended upon."

"From then on, the baying could be heard. It sounded loud and near at hand when Bruce crossed the ridges, and faint and far away when in the deep cañons. But it progressed toward the brow where Rawlins was seated. Once the deer lead south, so it seemed, but then again it seemed north. Rawlins had now ceased to be impatient. He knew; he looked at his watch and calculated: "Bruce can make it in the same time as he did last season," he said, and it was yet one hour and a half till 5 o'clock.

"In an hour Bruce had crossed three cañons—two small ones yet to cross. Rawlins peered into the manzanita-covered cañons, but no sign. Bruce was baying loud, and in quick succession. Rawlins knew he could not be over 200 yards behind the deer, and Bruce would yet gain, for he knew, too, his chase was soon to close.

"When the second cañon was crossed, Rawlins saw Bruce. His huge body looked as a speck; he seemed hardly to move. Then a little in front, down on the off side of the cañon, the buck. Rawlins blew through the back peep of his Lyman sight, wiped off a cartridge on his shirt sleeve. He then sat immovable, in wait. In the last cañon Bruce was at least 200 yards behind, and now he quickened his pace. The deer walked up the side, and Rawlins saw him stop and look back. Then on, to Rawlins—and death.

"The spring below the brow where Rawlins was seated was where the deer was headed for. And Rawlins waited breathlessly for him to come over the last ridge. The baying came nearer to the ridge, nearly there, and the deer trotted totteringly to the level, looked back toward the dog,-and then started down the cañon. Bruce was not fifty feet behind. Now they were within 200 yards of Rawlins, but he waited. The spring was 100, and there the deer must die. Bruce rushed; was at the deer's flank, and, when the spring was reached, was at his side. Then Rawlins fired. The deer bawled, and Bruce howled in pain. Rawlins for a moment was immovable; his face white, hand trembling, and as he rose to his feet, he spoke: 'I've shot my dog.'

"You see, Rawlins hit the deer in the neck; the bullet went through and struck the dog just below—about three inches—the heart. Well, sir, that night Rawlins carried Bruce to camp, dressed the wound as best he could, and that same night walked to Los Angeles, got a doctor, and next day was at camp with Bruce. Ninety miles of trail, unfit for horse, without rest!

"Yes, the dog, after three weeks, became well and strong again. But Rawlins at times, especially when the call for the wild grows too strong for the most of us, will hold his head, whistle for Bruce, and then caress him, look deep into the dog's eyes, and at times I've hear him mutter: 'If I had killed you!'

"I sometimes think that if the dog had died, Rawlins would have gone insane; others say he would have soon forgot; but Rawlins goes on hunts no more unless old Bruce stays home."

NEW VERSION OF CAESAR.

[The following remarkable appreciation of "Julius Caesar" is pieced together without change of phrase or spelling from several examination papers lately presented at an academy in Pennsylvania:]

Caesar is a tragedy of blood. The piece about Shylock was almost bloody but the knife didn't reach the breast of him. Caesar wanted to be a tyrant but he did not want any crowns on his head so he refused them in broad daylight. He grew so big that he could straddle the world which scared indeed his men who were his enemies.

They came together one night when lions were rained down without chains in the streets of Italy, and when red lightnings were running this way and that. They were all there but Brutus who was the honorablest of all the men when Caesar lived those days. Cassium and Cascada were much in the things. Then they threw through the windows of Brutuses' orchard handing characters which made the heart of Brutus burn fierce over the dark state of the peoples' rights among the citizens of Rome.

I pitied Brutus then as he read with tears falling about how he was noble and about how Caesar was hard on the poor. Then he called his wife and sharpened up his blade and told her not to eat any fire that day as he could not fail to win the fight. But she ate the fire after jagging herself.—[Atlantic Monthly.

WHEN THE TENOR WAS FINED.

The late Judge [Biff] Hall of Chicago took great delight in telling the following story of "Punch" Wheeler:

Wheeler, at that time the advance agent of a minstrel company, had returned to New York before the close of the theatrical season, and a friend, meeting him on Broadway, asked him how he had found business.

"Very bad," said "Punch;" "so bad that the only way we could pay the members of the troupe was to fine them. It worked splendidly, too; and by the time we reached Texas the manager had squared up with the whole company excepting the first tenor, who was such a proper chap that there was no chance to find fault with his actions. At Galveston Mr. Tenor sang for his solo 'The Lighthouse by the Sea,' and for an encore responded with 'Over the Hills to the Poorhouse.' That gave the boss the opportunity he was looking for, and he levied on the songster's salary for the entire amount—first, for telling the business we were playing to, and second, for giving away the route of the show."—[Judge.

"Tainted Money."

S. S. BREESE STEVENS, treasurer of the Burton Holmes "Travelogues," tells of an old colored minister he heard preach in Richmond, Va., about the time the great hue and cry was being raised in the North over "tainted money."

There was a large revival meeting going on at one of the colored churches, and Mr. Stevens got there just in time to hear part of the worthy colored clergyman's discourse on "tainted money." It was something like this:

"Brethren and sisteren, w'en yo' stops ter kinsider de millions and millions and millions dis yhere man owns and inspect dese yhere millions 'long side his gifts, de inspection am powerful queer. Now hit ain't fo' me to enquire whar de money comes from dat each member of my flock draps in de plate, en I don't zackly see why fo' my colleagues up North ask questions—de onliest taint I bin able ter diskiver 'bout dis yhere 'tainted money,' is, 'taint 'nuff."

As She Interpreted Scripture.

A NEW ENGLAND lady recently located in Georgia, and was not familiar with the Southern custom of speaking of the afternoon as "evening."

One morning when she was away from home, an old friend who was passing through the city called, and on her return the old negro servant told her of the gentleman's visit, and said that he would call again in the "evenin'."

In the afternoon she left the house again, and when she came home, great was her disappointment to find a note from her friend expressing his regret at not seeing her, as he was leaving the city that day.

Indignant at the mistake, she called the servant.

"How is this, Phoebe?" she demanded. "I thought you told me this gentleman said he would call this evening."

"Yes'm, he did."

"But he couldn't have said so, for he came this afternoon."

"Law, Mis' 'Liza," she said, "de Bible doan say nuthin' 'bout 'afternoon,' it jes say "de mornin' and de evenin' was de fust day."

Tom Reed's Telegram.

ONCE upon a time, when Tom Reed was in his prime, he was traveling to meet an eminent gentleman at Pittsburgh, on an important political subject. At Harrisburg he received a telegram from the other party, saying:

And Reed telegraphed back instantly:

"Buy a new shirt at my expense, and come any way."

The Demonstrator.

MAYOR WEAVER, of Philadelphia, was the guest of honor at a dinner given by A. J. Drexel Biddle. In the course of the dinner the reform Mayor said:

"This great cleansing movement now at work in our city will only succeed by being persistently kept up. We must not grow weary in well-doing. Our enthusiasm must not cool. Above all, we must not expect our friends to do the work. We must do the work ourselves.

"A wise old man said wisely to me yesterday:

"'Too many of the reforms that I have seen remind me of the way my father used to weed the kitchen garden.

"'Father would rush me out into the garden with him, and weed like a madman for about two minutes.

"'There,' he would say; 'now you see how easy it is.'

"'Then he would go off and sit down in the shade with his pipe and the weekly paper, and leave me to keep at it all the afternoon.'"

Man and Beast.

THE president of the trust, in an affable, after-luncheon mood, stopped to converse with old George, a stableman of Factory 49 A.

"Well, George, how goes it?" he said, taking a dollar cigar from his mouth.

"Fair to middlin', sir," George answered. "Fair to middlin'."

And he continued to currycomb a bay horse, while the president smoked and looked on in a good-humored silence.

"Me and this here hoss," George said suddenly, "has worked for your firm sixteen year."

"Well, well," said the president, thinking a little guiltily of George's $7 salary. "And I suppose you are both pretty highly valued, George, eh?"

"H'm," said George; "the both of us was took sick last week, and they got a doctor for the hoss, but they just docked my pay."

His Religion.

NOT long ago a certain clergyman from the West was called to a church in Jersey City. Soon after his arrival, the divine's wife made the usual visits to the members of the parish. One of these, a plumber's wife, was asked by the good lady whether the family were regular churchgoers, whereupon the wife of the plumber replied that while she and her children were attendants at divine service quite regularly, her husband was not.

"Dear me," said the minister's wife, "that's too bad! Does your husband never go to church?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that he never went," was the reply. "Ocasionally Will goes to the Unitarian, now and then to the Methodist, and I have known him to attend the Catholic church."

A look of perplexity came to the face of the visitor. "Perhaps your husband is an agnostic," suggested she.

"Not at all," hastily answered the other; "he's a plumber. When there is nothing for him to do at one church, there is very likely something for him at one of the others."—[Harper's Weekly.

Said the first little girl, "My brother Tom's got the beautifulest silver cup that godfather gave him."

"Well," said the third little girl, "my brother Eddie ain't half so big, maybe, as your brothers. But," she added, with ill-concealed triumph, "the doctor says he's had more fits than any other baby in the neighborhood!"—[Harper's Weekly.

The Bass Drummer.

AT the Players' Club they were talking about the late Mrs. Nell Burgess.

"What I liked about her," said a comedian, "was her modesty, her plain, unassuming way.

"Though she was an artist to her fingertips, she detested hifalutin, spread eagle talk about art. She believed that the best actors went about their work in a simple, practical manner, as a plumber goes about his, and she believed that discussion of the theory of art and all that sort of thing was futile.

"I once heard a dramatic critic ask her whether she believed in realization or idealization, and whether she acted subjectively or objectively.

"She answered with a laugh that being such a plain person, she was, like the bass drummer, unequal to such questions.

"She said that a musician once complimented a bass drummer on his drumming.

"'Tell, me, my dear sir,' he asked 'do you play by ear or by note?'

"'Mein friendt,' replied the drummer. 'I blay py main strength.'"

The Hidebound Professor.

ARTHUR E. BOSTWICK, the head of the circulation department of New York's free libraries, will not permit the circulation of George Bernard Shaw's books among his patrons because he considers the Shaw plays immoral.

A commission merchant reproached Mr. Bostwick for this action the other night. He said it was impossible to find anything immoral in Mr. Shaw's work. But the librarian defended himself stoutly and adroitly. He pointed out that he had many kinds of readers to fend for. Among other things he said:

"To be careful is not to be hidebound. To be zealous and strict is not to imitate the naturalistic German professor of Jena.

"This professor belonged to the Haecklian school. The monistic theory was the very breath of his body to him. To say or do or think a thing contrary to Haeckel would have been impossible to this simple, narrow soul.

"There is a story at Jena that once the professor got shipwrecked off a tropical island. As soon as the ship struck, the old gentleman leaped overboard and swam ashore.

"But no sooner was he on dry land than he turned and plunged into the water again, and swam back to the ship.

"He seized his stout wife in his arms, leaped headlong overboard, and, despite his burden, again reached shore in safety.

"There the captain, who had already landed, said to him in an amazed tone:

"'Why didn't you save your wife the first time?'

"'Ah,' said the professor, with a satisfied smile, 'I was bound to save myself first, you know. Self-preservation is nature's highest law.'"

"'The money tourists bring in.'"

In the Feather Kingdom—Birds and Fine Poultry.

BY ELIZABETH GRINNELL,
Author of "Our Feathered Friends," "Birds of Song and Story," "Stories of Our Western Birds," etc.

A ROYAL POULTRY FANCIER.

VICTORIA WAS A LOVER AND OWNER OF FINE FOWLS.

one need be surprised to learn that Queen Victoria was a lover, as well as owner, of fine poultry, when one recalls her domestic virtues and her preference for simple life and ways. It may be an incentive to those who have not given the subject attention to read a short sketch of this glorious queen as she appeared in the role of poultry fancier about the year 1843. We are indebted to an old copy of the London Pictorial Times for the interesting description borrowed for use later in an old and reliable chicken book, "The American Poultry Companion." On the same page appears a sketch of the royal poultry-house, which resembles in many respects a modern California rambling bungalow, with and picturesque cupolas and lattice work.

In a secluded wood on the boundaries of the Home Park stands the Home Farm, or the farm attached to Windsor Castle—the private farm of Her Majesty. In this establishment, which was founded by George III, are situated the royal fowl house and poultry yards, but of which, notwithstanding their great interest, the public knew nothing, save the mere fact of their existence. Here Her Majesty, retiring from the fatigues of state, finds a grateful relief in the simple pursuits of a country life. In cultivating the homely recreations of a farm, Her Majesty has exhibited great industry and much taste. The buildings and farm routine which sufficed for the clumsy management of 1793, have been discovered by Her Majesty to be totally unsuited to the enlightened system of 1843, and hence, under the auspices of Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and others, an entire reorganization of the establishment has been commenced, and is now in progress.

The fowl house lately built at Windsor is a semi-Gothic building, of simple and appropriate beauty. It consists of a central pavilion, used for inspecting the birds, crowned on the top by an elegant dovecot, and on the sides, of wings capable of symmetric extension, in which are placed the model roosting-houses, and laying and breeding nests of the fowls. The ground, in front, slopes toward the park, and is inclosed and divided by light wire fences into separate wards, for the "run,' daily exercise of the birds.

Inside these wards, gravel walks, bordered by grass plots, lead to the entrances of the fowl houses. In the proportions, distributions, and fittings of the apartments of this house, considerable knowledge of the habits, with corresponding and most commendable regard to the preferences of their granivorous tenants, has been displayed; the chambers are spacious, airy, and of an equal and rather warm temperature, which accords with their original habits, and their nests are made as far as possible to resemble the dark bramble-covered recesses of their original jungles. In this particular Her Majesty sets a good example to the farmers, who too often follow the false routine of their fathers, rather than consult the habits and obey the natural instincts of the animals around them."

So much for the late beloved Queen as a poultry fancier. Note her "grateful relief in the simple pursuits of country life!" How encouraging to those who suffer from the insomnia and weariness of our own fashionable life. How encouraging to the "four hundred" in Southern California to engage in the poultry business for the sake of renewing their beauty and youthful charm; we must remember that Queen Victoria was noted for youthfulness even in age. Doubtless she owed some of this virtue to the "good spirits" sure to come in the wake of any rural delight. Note her royal knowledge of the "habits" of her pets, their "requirements" and of their natural jungles." We are prone to neglect and pen our poultry in clean, but close and uncloistered apartments. It is supposed that Queen Victoria read the poultry journals and the books concerning the topic, as well as originating methods of

The following letter from a stranger in a strange land is an appeal to those who deal in poultry and supplies and journals. I give the entire address so that the writer may be found at home.

Sept. 25.—[Editor Poultry Page:] I am a stranger in a strange land, and wishing to raise poultry, etc., in a modest way, and not knowing of a poultry journal published in California, I take the liberty of addressing you as to the finding of stock and building and for journals to help me. You will confer a favor by putting me in communication with persons who deal in them. Yours,
WILLIAM M'KEAND.

To poultry journals I am able to refer Mr. McKeand: the Pacific Coast Fancier, and the Live Stock Tribune of Los Angeles.

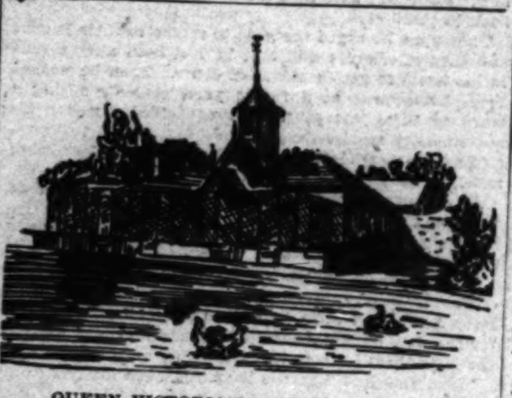
I have just asked one of our best and largest poultry men his choice in poultry journals, and he gave me the Reliable Poultry Journal of Quincy, Ill., as the very best ever knew, though he has taken practically all of East and West.

Eggs in the Fall.

eggs for future stock, I will say a word of warning against hatching eggs in the fall of the year, though I am aware that those having the same to sell will claim "fall eggs are as reliable as spring eggs when set." The best poultrymen I know say that the best come from spring hatchings, and I believe from the standpoint of reason. In the fall hens as well as cocks are weary with their year's work. They have been or are moulting, or if not moulting are for reliable increasing. Wait till January, the first eggs of the season when the fowls are with all creation, and you will have success. Why not buy your own fowls for spring hatching now, when poultry is cheaper than in the spring, and get them "good and ready" for family affairs? Time and money would be saved. I have seen many a fall hatch refuse to grow, remaining dwarfs. But many men of many minds. I have no eggs to sell myself, and if I had eggs (and wanted chickens for breeding purposes) I wouldn't set them. Of course my opponents will say: "If you don't hatch in the fall where would be your broilers for winter and spring market?" Broilers are raised for market and are sold off as soon as they are properly stuffed, not kept for breeding purposes. Last spring's pullets just beginning to lay now are the best investment for a beginner, though the more expensive to start with. They will lay on till next fall before they moult or retire from business. Little chicks just hatched and bought of an incubator man might give a person something to do and a little experience during the winter.

Caponizing Again.

This department is in receipt of letters from different points in the county asking for information as to caponizing, its price per dozen fowls, the best operators, etc. The price is about a nickel apiece, I think. Cheap enough, and yet dear enough to induce some operators to do the work without chloroform. If you must have capons, use chloroform and so have a good conscience before heaven and animals. "It doesn't hurt," is the assurance of the operators without chloroform. It doesn't hurt the operator, I admit, unless he happen to be of the humane stuff Mr. and Mrs. Drew are made of, whose experiences in the operating-room have been given.



QUEEN VICTORIA'S CHICKEN HOUSE.

It is impossible for me to give the names of operators that are reliable for the reason that in this enterprise as in many others any person seeing a possible nickel in the experiment or recourse will volunteer. Probably by reference to the poultry journals you may obtain the information needed. But witness the operation for yourself in both kinds, the chloroform and the natural!

The Prevailing Disease.

It seems that roup is prevalent in these Southern counties judging from many inquiries both oral and by letter regarding treatment, etc.

HOLLYWOOD (Cal.) Sept. 25.—[Editor Feathered Kingdom:] As I am a constant reader of The Times, I am much interested in the Sunday Magazine about poultry. I am living in Hollywood on a lemon grove and raise chickens on a small scale. I have the White and Barred Plymouth Rocks, which I take a fancy to, and they run at large in the grove; have plenty of fresh water running in troughs all the time. I change their feed quite often. In the mornings it is wet feed, in the evenings corn, wheat or barley. Now I have some sick chickens; they have swelled head and sore eyes and seem choked up. They will not eat. They have a discharge at the nose, often sneezing and coughing. I do not understand what it is. Can you tell me the disease and the cause, and if I am giving them the right kind of feed. I would feel very grateful if I could find out something to cure them.
MRS. J. F. W.

This is a fair description of roup. Some say this is a disease of the cold, wet months, but here it is facing us right in the heat of summer. In other places on this page, and last Sunday as well, appear remedies as suggested. In regard to letting hens run in irrigated lemon or orange groves, I will state what a lady told me who is quite an extensive poulterer. She says "in running among the trees the fowls find the loose wet earth and mulching, and burrow in it half the time, enjoying the coolness and the moisture." She thinks it gives them roup and rheumatism, and has discontinued the freedom of the orchard. I do not myself think this can be the cause, as other poulterers who keep their fowls on the warm, dry hillsides are having to meet the same disease.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 20.—[Editor Bird Page:] I wonder if you could give me any suggestion as to the nature of a disease which is devastating my flock, both old and young. The first symtom I notice is a general drowsiness, followed by ruffled plumage, and almost immediately there will be a soreness of the head and neck, more especially in and around the eyes and nostrils. As the disease progresses there seems to be no abatement of appetite until the victim is rendered blind and unable to pick up the food, when starvation sets in. In some the throat seems affected, a mass of water and matter will be found in the crop and throat.
Treatment such as will ordinarily control germ diseases has absolutely no effect in this case. Any suggestion as to the name, cause, treatment, will be gladly accepted through the columns of The Times.
MRS. J. B. P.

Roup again, and all the time. Here is an Australian cure for roup.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 2.—[Editor Feather Kingdom:] In Australia the use of eucalyptus oil is universal. Roupe and gapes in chickens always give way to the oil treatment. In the first stage of either disease use one or two drops in a bread pill. In an advanced stage prepare one or two more pills. This in Australia is considered the cheapest as well as the surest cure for roup or gapes. One dose is usually enough to cure a sick fowl.
C. L. W.

This suggestion as to oil of eucalyptus should delight Californians. Think of the supply of oil right at our doors. And since this remedy is used by our physicians in the human family, it seems quite reasonable that it might help in the diseases of poultry. I think the one-drop dose rather small, since I lean toward the old school of allopathy, but the homeopathic dose is safe. We are glad to receive any suggestion as to the treatment of these dreaded diseases. Since having given the treatment with sulphide of calcium and permanganate of potash, I have heard from one or two large poultry plants that it is doing its good work successfully.

And here is another letter from elsewhere.

COACHELLA (Cal.) Oct. 2.—[Editor Feather Kingdom:] I see by the Times of October 1, you quote from the Farmers' Bulletin a remedy for the gapes when young chickens are affected. The article states that they usually recover if attacked when half grown. Mine don't. I have lost a great many White Leghorns about half grown during the last six weeks from the gapes. Please tell me what to do. Have lost others also half grown from "going light." They get very thin, refuse to eat, in fact, simply waste away. What is the matter with them? They have free range, plenty of green and dry feed and abundance of pure water from flowing wells. Kindly help me if possible as I have spent both time and money on my chickens, and am well nigh discouraged. Please answer through The Times' columns and do not use my name.
B.

As soon as this appears there will also appear various and sundry treatments from quack chicken doctors with patent remedies to sell.

I am assured by those who have tried the patent remedies that none are reliable. Neither is it safe to dip feathers in turpentine or coal oil and swab out the windpipe. A friend tells me she has caused several victims in a single dosage to turn their toes to the daisies before they could get down out of her lap. Some say, and I believe there is virtue in it, that if the chickens are put in a bag and shaken gently with fine half-slacked lime, the worms will let go and run away. As to the "going light" disease it may be simply anemia, a failing of the red-blood supply, or tuberculosis or parasites. It is a fact that poultry is subject to consumption, especially in unclean places and where the caretakers themselves are not thoughtful about expectoration. Iron in the drinking water, or better still, an iron pill bought at the druggist's such as is given to human subjects, "iron, strychnine and quinine," would be beneficial. This for either disease. It could do no harm. Slip the tablet or pill down the throat, with a sip of water to follow. We will have more later to say about these chicken diseases. Let those who have personal experience in the matter send their prescriptions.

Marvelous Old Hens.

I clip the following from a recent newspaper, and will just add that my old Betty, aged 15 and more, is today laying, and does lay every day, her beautiful yellow egg. She has a lameness which does not admit of her scratching, and so she has the freedom of the garden. She sits around in corners just like any old woman thinking of the past, when she was young, and possibly of the future world.

"There died on Saturday at Evensville, Tenn., a hen that was known to be 22 years old, says the Chattanooga correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

"This unprecedentedly long-lived hen belonged to George Bradley.

"Betsy was one of a fine brood of chicks hatched on the day that Bradley's eldest son was born, nearly 23 years ago. By the date of the young man's birth the family established her age.

"Betsy was occasionally permitted to indulge her motherly instincts, upon which auspicious occasions she invariably brought into the world from a dozen to fifteen of the finest chicks that ever scratched gravel.

"When not engaged in motherly duties, Betsy sometimes worked overtime and laid two eggs a day.

"As year after year passed without any appreciable difference in Betsy's strenuosity, she became the wonder of the county and the barnyard jewel of the Bradley farm.

"For nineteen years Betsy kept up her good work. It is estimated that during that time this industrious hen laid 4750 eggs and hatched 570 chickens—'mostly girls,' as the musical comedy advertisements would say.

"Betsy was buried yesterday with honors befitting her, and over her grave Mr. Bradley will erect a tombstone appropriately inscribed as follows:

HERE LIES LAYING BETSY.
Born in 1883: Died in 1905.
She did many a fowl deed for those she loved.
Peace to her bones—let them lay,
May she lay again some other day.

"If the 4750 eggs that Betsy laid during her nineteen years of faithful service were sold in the market at their present price they would realize $908.50. If her 570 chickens brought an average price of 30 cents they would represent a market value of $171.

"On this basis Betsy earned $1079.50 for her owner before she retired from active duty and commenced to take life easy."

VERY PROPERLY IRRITATED.

A poet and literary man of some celebrity was visited in his study one morning by a manager of a lecture bureau, who said that he had called to ask the writer to take part in an entertainment.

"We want you to read selections from your own works, Mr. Gillespie, together with an original poem, composed expressly for the occasion. Name your own price. We'll announce the progr'm——"

"My price," interrupted Mr. Gillespie, "will be $60."

"Isn't that a little steep?"

"Not at all, everything considered."

The manager tried to beat him down to fifty; but he was immovable, and the bargain was finally closed at the first-named figure.

"Alpheus," said Mrs. Gillespie, after the caller had gone, "wasn't that more than you intended to charge him when he first spoke?"

"Yes," he said, "it's just twice as much; but he irritate me $30 worth by calling it 'progr'm.''—[Youth's Companion.

Bothersome Baby Jack.

A KIDNAPING WITH REWARDS TO THE KIDNAPED.

By a Special Contributor.

BABY JACK caused a commotion in the family when he was born, and for a long while afterward; but he was made welcome, just the same. He was called "Bothersome Baby Jack," because he caused lots of bother, and for no other reason.

Nobody believed that he would ever amount to much, and few believed that he would ever amount to anything at all, excepting his mother, and she thought that the world would be at her baby's feet before his manhood's mind had developed all of its sturdy strength. She did not hesitate to say so, either; and nobody blamed her, because she was good and gentle to everybody, everybody liked her, and nobody would wound her feelings by telling her the truth, that nobody really believed that her baby would ever do anything except cause bother.

Well, in due course of time the baby grew and became a very strong, athletic young man; but he bothered everybody, from his teacher in the infant class to his tutor preparing him for college. Those who knew him best said that he was nobody's enemy but his own; and that, with all of his faults, he was not vicious nor little nor mean.

This story would not have been told, but for the fact that when "Bothersome Baby Jack" was 17 years of age (and that was two years ago), another baby was born in the neighborhood. Now, remember, that the original bothersome baby caused all of the bother to people by his own doings, and did so for nineteen years. He had a good mother, who loved him and stood by him.

But this new baby was named likewise "Bothersome Baby Jack," for an entirely different reason. He was really a good baby and a very much better baby than the original bothersome baby; but his mother was so different. Maybe you never noticed that mothers are different; but they are. It is an unfortunate fact that thousands of them are wholly unworthy to bear the holy name of mother; and they never will be worthy, because they are so pitifully selfish.

Now, whereas the good little mother of our bothersome baby, now 19 years of age, took splendid care of him, the mother of the recently-born bothersome baby was a "gadabout" mother, just as she had been a butterfly girl and young woman. Her sweet little baby was raised on a bottle, and raised by hand—a nurse's hand. From the hour of his birth the new "Bothersome Baby Jack" was made to feel the lack of love. Babies can feel that lack. The nurse's hand can never give to any baby the thrill of delights in living that comes from the singularly gentle touch of a loving mother, proud of her offspring.

The mother of the new baby was constantly seeking invitations to entertainments, and always making preparations for coming entertainments in the elegantly-furnished home which an overfond husband provided for her. Baby Jack's father was a domestic man, and he loved his baby, too. And baby knew it before he was many months old. He knew the gentle touch and gentle voice of papa.

Every afternoon baby's mother was at some vaudeville, or minstrel performance. In the evening she attended seances, balls, and operas. Singular to relate, she made her baby a bothersome one, by calling on her neighbors and her neighbors' daughters, to "look in and see after baby," while she was running about seeking divertisement and pleasure.

But her course of carelessness was brought to a sudden end, and our 19-year-old "Bothersome Baby Jack" had something to do with it.

The reckless, unworthy mother went boating down the Hudson, and asked Lottie Anderson and Lottie Booth, cousins, to "look after baby during the afternoon;" and they agreed to do so, because their mother was going on the excursion to entertain some country visitors, and the little baby's mother was going along, ostensibly to help entertain them.

Instead of coming back in time for supper, as the others did, the bothersome baby's mother remained for the night boat. It was her habit thus to overstay her time, on all such occasions, and it was no wonder that the neighbors all called the sweet little fellow "bothersome," because his mother caused the bother.

On this occasion, the two cousins remained with baby until 7 o'clock, and then they went home to their dinners, leaving baby with his professional nurse; who cared nothing for baby, and looked after him only for her hire. When the girls returned, after half an hour of absence, the "Bothersome Baby Jack" was gone. The professional nurse knew nothing about him, except that he had been in his crib all the time, and had not even cried for his bottle.

The girls searched the house from attic to cellar, although baby could scarcely crawl. He was gone. He was lost, and no clew was left wherewith to trace him. Lottie Anderson went home and summoned help. The parents of both girls came. Intensely interested conferences were held. It was finally decided to notify the police department, and that was done. When baby's mother returned, after 11 o'clock that night, the police and detectives were there, asking all manner of questions, and vainly trying to find some clew for the missing baby.

Baby's mother could not realize the gravity of the situation at first. She had put away her baby so often, that she did not miss him when he was reported lost. But by the vehemence of her husband's denunciation of her she began to realize that something of more importance than a rug had been lost. Then, crying and shrieking with hysterics, she denounced the young ladies for leaving her baby.

Although her husband and the detectives tried to make her understand that the young ladies were in no sense responsible for her neglected baby, she denounced them the more, and accused them of abducting the little one. She grew so violent that a physician had to be summoned to give her opiates. Thus always with the wrongdoers—they blame others.

Well, baby was lost, and apparently lost forever. The newspapers published outlines of the story, not fixing any responsibility, however, on the mother who neglected the lost one. The detectives were busy day and night for a week; but there was not a Sherlock Holmes in their entire battalion who could find the baby.

Ten days passed. The father suffered agonies, but in silence. The mother was almost insanely violent. Finally, she, too, became quiet and calm. The first thought of right reason that ever took lodgment in her frivolous brain finally entered and remained there, and that was, her own culpability.

On the evening of the tenth day, the cousins, Lottie Anderson and Lottie Booth, visited the sorrowing household, accompanied by their neighbor, John Agnew, the 19-year-old "Bothersome Baby Jack," of whom mention was made above. He had nothing to say, but listened to the story of suffering, and condolences, and final outburst of the bereaved mother:

"If I could only have my baby back in my arms, I'd never leave him again to neighbors nor nurses. I'd devote all of my waking hours to caring for him. I'd give up all society and all amusements, if the good Lord would only give me back my baby."

"If you feel that way," spoke up the silent John Agnew, "I am very sure that the good Lord will send baby back to you."

Thereupon he urged the girls to return to their homes, and they afterwards said that he had been almost rude in his haste to get them out of doors. Then he walked them homewards at a racing pace, scarcely saying a word to them, except when they chided him for his moodiness, when he remarked:

"I am intensely interested in the case of the lost baby; and I am so sorry for the mother and father."

As soon as he had escorted them home, he hastened to his own home, and there left word with his sister that he was going downtown and would remain all night at the club.

The next morning, before 10 o'clock, a beautiful Sister of Charity stood at the door of the home of "Bothersome Baby Jack," and when the bell was answered, she asked for the lady of the house. When the mother appeared, the Sister held forth to her a baby, saying:

"Does this look like the baby you have lost?"

"My baby, my boy Jack! Oh, where did you find him?" she cried as she took the crowing little fellow into her arms, and gave him the first real motherly kiss of his life.

"We found him in a basket in the vestibule of St. Ann's, one night last week, and early this morning we were told by a young man at the door, a handsome, strong young gentleman, that he believed the baby to be yours. And so, I came to see. We have taken good care of him, as we do of all charity charges brought to us."

She would accept no reward other than the gratitude of the mother, saying that restoring the little one to his own was reward of heaven for her and the other Sisters.

And now, the two Lotties and some of their friends are hinting that the 19-year-old "Bothersome Baby Jack" was in some way responsible for the abduction and return of the young "Bothersome Baby Jack."

Well, maybe he was. But, no matter who did it, good has come of it, for Baby is better off, and so is his mother. SMITH D. FRY.

SOME LOST ARTS.

Not as much as we used to, but occasionally even yet, one hears of some wonder accomplished by the ancients which cannot be done now.

Not so many years ago it was quite commonly asserted that modern workmen could not quarry, or, having quarried, could not handle stones as large as the monoliths of Egypt; and the writer has heard a public speaker of note assert that it would be impossible to handle, with modern implements, such large stones as were used in the Pyramids, or to join them as perfectly as they are joined there; yet, when occasion arose, larger stones than any of these were quarried in Maine, and some of the larger monoliths themselves were transported, not only to the sea, but across it, and erected in England, France and America, and there are individuals today who might, if they chose, cause the transportation to and erection in this country of the largest Pyramids or build new ones ten times larger and more durable. Pyramids are not being generally built nowadays, because they are not in line with the trend of modern ambition; that's all.

It is very doubtful if a "Damascus blade" would stand half as severe usage as a modern band saw blade, or even as much as the spring of a 40-cent clock; while the ornamentation of those wondrous blades, so far as the mechanical execution is concerned, can be excelled by apprentices and amateurs of today.

Of the "lost art" of hardening copper little is heard of late years, though one occasionally hears a wiseling from the wilds wish that he knew how to do it as well as the ancients, and, while it is perhaps regrettable that he doesn't, his ignorance is his own fault.

Many arts and devices have been abandoned because new knowledge has made them useless, and time spent in rediscovering them would be worse than wasted. The modern youth had much better spend his time studying the art of his contemporaries than that which is "lost."—[Scientific American.

"Recent revelations," says the Baltimore Sun, "show that there is graft even in coffins." The country would be better off if more of the grafters were there.—[Kansas City Journal.

CARGO OF ANTHROPOIDS REACHES ENGLAND FROM AFRICA.

From the London Leader.

A Weird Collection.

To capture alive, Mr. Hamlyn explained, a full-grown gorilla is impossible. It has a ferocious habit of literally tearing its opponent limb from limb, or of [illegible] his face away. The Chimpanzee Season.

The chimpanzees, Mr. Hamlyn said, are in season between December and March, consequently they were in abundance when he arrived on the coast, and his collection is a remarkable one. Five of the party are the biggest ever seen. One, Jim, is already well educated, and has developed the usual music hall ambition. He had eight months' liberty and culture at a trading factory, and is now fit for the best society. He is about six years old. He entirely forgot his manners yesterday, however, and his remarks to the porters were awful. Eight of the chimpanzees are destined for the [illegible] commission.

NEW THEORY OF ETHER.

STARTLING SUGGESTIONS OF A RECENT HIGH AUTHORITY.

[W. Shenstone, F.R.S., in Cornhill Magazine:] Of all the theories of the ether that lately propounded by Prof. Osborne Reynolds is perhaps the most startling. It upsets all our previous ideas on the subject. According to this, the youngest theory of the ether, we must look upon the ether as the one really substantial thing in the universe, its density being 10,000 times greater than that of water; while matter, which seems so substantial, consists, so to speak, in an absence of mass, and has the character of a mere wave in the ether. On this newest theory "we are all waves," as the author of the theory, breaking into poetry, exclaimed at the close of the eighth section of his Rede lecture. This astonishing proposition, which has cost its author no less than twenty years of labor, asks us to imagine that the universe, except the minor portions which constitute matter, is built like a bag of sand, of grains of definite shape and in size so inconceivably small that their diameters are no greater than the seven hundred thousand-millionth part of the wave length of violet light, which in its turn amounts to only sixteen-millionths of an inch, and so closely packed that, though not absolutely immovable, four hundred thousand-millionth of the seven hundred thousand-millionth of one-sixty thousandth part of an inch—i. e., the four hundred thousand-millionth part of their own diameter—would represent approximately the mean free path through which these particles are free to move. Prof. Reynolds tells us that the density of the medium, far from being almost indefinitely small, is nearly five hundred times as great as that of the densest matter known to us on earth, and its pressure more than three thousand times greater than that which any material yet tried has been known to stand.

To get some idea of this conception of the ether, picture to yourself a billiard table carefully packed from end to the other with line after line of billiard balls, each one so nicely fitted or geared into the next that the balls are packed almost as close to each other as is possible, yet not so very tightly as to prevent, absolutely, motion among them. Imagine, again, that you have a layer of balls, as on a billiard table, confined by the sides of the table, but layer upon layer piled one above the other and extending absolutely without limit in every direction. Remember that these balls or grains are so minute that, say, 11,200,000,000,000,000,000 of them side by side along a line would only occupy a single inch, and you will have a picture, so far as may be of Prof. Reynolds's conception of the universal medium ether.

ST. HELENA TODAY.

Time was when St. Helena, the lonely Atlantic rock where Napoleon lingered out his last years, was a calling place for ships from England to the Cape of Good Hope, India, Australia and the East. The little island, in fact, lived and flourished on the money spent by sailors. But the construction of the Suez Canal diverted this trade and aimed a fatal blow at St. Helena's prosperity. A pathetic reminder of the good old times and the present bad ones is the announcement in the columns of the St. Helena Guardian that the local theatre is to be sold.—[London Chronicle.

Maxim Gorky.

A Russian Waif Who Became a Literary Power.

From T. P.'s London Weekly.

"ALORS c'est une emeute?" said Louis XVI.

"Non, sire, c'est une révolution," was the answer.

Yes, Gorky effected a revolution in Russian literature, but could do nothing for the political revolution of his country, and was arrested during the recent disturbances in Russia. This adds one more strange circumstance to his life that reads like a romance, and is, perchance, more interesting than that of Cervantes. Maxim Gorky, today a world-famous Russian writer, is a child of the houseless proletariat, and his name means "bitter" in the Russian language. He has adopted it in preference to his family name of Pieshkov, probably on account of the bitterness of his former life, or his bitter attacks on the present social organization, not only of his own country, but of the whole world, the civilization to which he is not indebted for anything, his whole creative power being entirely original.

A Hard Childhood.

That is the reason why, in his short stories, in his political allegories and dramas, there are so many characteristics of unconquered barbarism, attracting by their simplicity and sincerity, sometimes reaching the limits of bold impudence. That extraordinary child of nature, who made the Russians forget Turgenieff, Dostojewsky, and Tolstoy for his own books, was born about thirty-four years ago in Nijni-Novgorod, where his father was a small upholsterer. This does not mean that Gorky is of purely plebeian origin; he belongs to the intermediate class of those castaways whom he likes to evoke in his writings. His grandfather was an officer in the Russian army during the reign of Nicolas I, but was deprived of his rank on account of his cruelty to the soldiers. As it seems, he was no kinder to his children, for Maxim Gorky's father ran away from home and became an artisan. Gorky's childhood was very hard. His mother, who was the daughter of a barge owner on the Volga, married again, and left the care of her little boy to her parents; but soon she died, and the future writer was taken from school, where he remained only five months.

On the Volga.

When Gorky was but 10 years old he was sent to a shoemaker as apprentice, but because of the cruelty of his master he soon ran away, and wandered throughout Nijni-Novgorod, trying different occupations, till at last he got the positioin of kitchen boy on board a ship on the Volga. His master, the cook, had a large box filled with books by popular writers, among which there was a translation of Alexander Dumas pere, and he made the boy read as much as he could spare the time from his everyday duties. The effect of the reading was a desire to enter a college in Kazan; he thought that the instruction was given gratuitously, and his disappointment was very bitter when he found that "it was not customary to give instruction for nothing to poor children," as he said in his autobiography. Then, having no means upon which to live, he became a vagabond again. In turns he chopped wood, worked in gardens, in the streets, in a baker's shop, in the meanwhile reading all kinds of books that he could borrow from people. It was a very hard life, so much so that he could not stand it any longer, and determined to end it by shooting himself, but the only result of his attempt on his life was a long illness, and the consequent inability to serve in the army. When he recovered he resumed his previous way of living; he was watchman on the railway, street sweeper, cabbage vendor, house painter, till at length, by one of the capricious whims of fortune, he became clerk to a lawyer named Lanin in Novgorod. This was the turning point of his life, for Mr. Lanin, a man of superior intelligence and unusual kindness, soon understood his new clerk's propensities, took a great interest in him, and helped him in his studies. "His influence on my education," says Gorky, "was enormous. To that highly educated and noble man I owe more than to anybody else."

The First Story.

Soon, however, Gorky's restless disposition got the better of him; he left his friend Lanin, and rushed into the world for a long wander, to which he was irresistibly attracted. He passed on foot throughout Bessarabia, the Ukraine, the country of the Don, the Crimea, the shores of the Black Sea, till at last he settled in Tiflis, where he worked in a railway shop. During his wanderings he became acquainted with a political outlaw named Kaluzyn, and this man, having noticed Gorky's extraordinary narrative talent, induced him to write a story. Such was the origin of Gorky's first story, called "Makar Chudra," which appeared in 1892 in the daily called Kavkaz, published in Tiflis. The success was immediate; the story attracted the critics' attention, and, encouraged by their very flattering opinion, he began to work in the literary field more systematically. In 1894 Gorky went back to Novgorod, where he probably would not have remained for a long time had he not met Korolenko, an author of great talent himself, and thanks to whom Gorky was able to get his stories accepted by the serious reviews. He "fell into a big literature," he quaintly puts it, "for Korolenko is the editor of a monthly called Ruskoye Bagatstvo. Korolenko, one can say, finished Gorky's literary education, and from that time the latter's activity increased; the critics followed every step of the young writer closely, and in about three years he became one of the most appreciated authors in Russia; a few years later he was world-famous, and proclaimed to be the foremost littérateur for the Russian reading people, and his popularity has overshadowed even that of Tolstoy.

Shalapin, the Russian Singer.

Twelve years passed since Gorky's first appearance in the literary field, and during that time he has written five volumes of short stories, two long novels, and two plays. His work brought him not only fame, but also gold, as it seems, quite enough of it, for he was able to give Gargantuan banquets to his friends, marry an actress, and keep open house to his followers and admirers, called "Podmaximki," among whom there is today the most famous and most popular Russian singer, by name Shalapin. His friendship with Gorky began when they were both vagabonds. They met in Kazan. Gorky then left his exalted position of the kitchen scullion on the steamer traveling on the Volga, and intended to go on a long tramp, in which he was joined by Shalapin and Shevillev, the latter also today a remarkable singer. None of them was then aware of Gorky's talent. In a certain country town they found a small theatrical company, and the three vagabonds made up their minds to propose their services to the director of it, in the capacity of chorus singers. Their voices were tried, and the result of the trial was worthy of being recorded as the proof of "professional competence." The directors of the company decided that Shalapin, who is today idolized by the whole of Russia, had no talent whatever as a singer and actor, while he found that Gorky had most promising qualities in that direction, and engaged him at once. The friends were then separated till they met again in St. Petersburg. Gorky, the now world-famous writer, and Shalapin, the opera singer, whose carriage in Odessa, Kieff, St. Petersburg, and Moscow was several times pulled by the enthusiastic crowd who took the place of his horses.

A Foe to All Fetters.

In his short stories Gorky makes a kind of poem of vagabond life, a poem undoubtedly romantic and inspired by the idea of the full and unconditional freedom of the human individual. His vagabond is nothing but a personification of human individuality. He is a foe to all fetters, whether made of iron or gold. And this inspiration produces a kind of beauty such as would come from the destructive phenomena of nature. At any rate it is neither commonplace nor tedious; one feels that there is some power in it, of what kind is another thing, but there is power. In Gorky's volumes we may find some really romantic stories, as, for instance, "Song About the Falcon," "Old Woman Isergil," "Makar Chudra;" all these breathe the same ruling passion for liberty. The great characteristic of Gorky's work, however, is neither that he writes about a class of people who have never been touched by the Russian literati, nor that he has given us a new and unknown type, nor that he has combined realism with romanticism. His importance lies in this, that he has given us lyrical poems in which the principal hero is the human spirit and its eternal searching after the truth of life and the truth of its own humiliating existence. But although Gorky describes slums, dirty dens, and evil-smelling dramshops, and often calls things by their real names, he never arouses in us that sense of disgust which is produced by the pages of some naturalistic novels. Smoke, dirt, smell, all disappear in the beauty of spiritual life, in the force and strangeness of the collisions of life. Through his vagabonds Gorky has reached the heights of symbolism as an inspired and refined allegory. It does not matter if the vagabonds are real or not; the point is that in them we can follow the wandering of the human spirit, its rebellious opposition to the artificiality of human existence. Gorky's mind is larger than his panegyrists think.

Always a Great Artist.

His lyrical flight towards freedom having been expressed in an artistic picture of the vagabond is sometimes less proud and full of assurance; sometimes one hears a moaning, sometimes one feels a kind of secret awe in the presence of the power and cruelty of life, but almost always he is a great artist, and let us hope, for the sake of true art, that his new difficulties will not prove detrimental to it, and that he will give us more such artistic stories as the following one about the bullfinch:

"During an awful dullness in a forest there resounded a marvelous song; the daring songster of narrow-mindedness, of the fetters of life, had declared war on the gods. All the birds flew to the spot from which that marvelous song came forth, and to their surprise they found that it was sung by a common wandering finch. He called the birds to follow him, to leave the dark forest, the damp marshes, to abandon cowardice and doubt. But the practical professor of modern history, the woodpecker, said that it would be useless to fly away, for 'beyond the forest is a field, empty in the summer and covered with snow in the winter, that at the other end of that field was a village, and in that village lived Grisha, the bird catcher.' The poor finch did not know what to answer; he could but say: 'Yes, I lied, for I did not know what was beyond the forest, but it makes one happy to believe and to hope. The woodpecker may be right, but what is the use of his truth when it weighs like a stone on the wings, and prevents one from flying high—high into the heavens?'"

That was the only defence he could bring forward.

A lawyer had a horse that always balked when he attempted to cross a certain bridge leading out of the village. No amount of whipping or urging would induce him to cross it, so he advertised him for sale. "To be sold for no other reason than that the owner would like to leave town."—[Mount Jewett (Pa.) News

Breathing.

BREATHING is without any doubt the most important physical function. "The breath is the life." We may do without food for weeks, we may do without water for days, but we cannot do without air many minutes.

Of late, in connection with the physical culture movement, there have been coming to the front a number of schools of breathing. Most of them are founded on oriental theories, and adopt oriental phraseology. The editor does not "take much stock" in these complicated suggestions in regard to breathing. Good deep breaths, that penetrate to the lower part of the lungs, will come with proper exercise, and proper attitude of the body. However, there is no doubt something in the rhythmic method of breathing.

A student of physical culture in Massachusetts wrote to Dr. D. A. Sargent, director of athletics at Harvard University, in regard to the value of breathing gymnastics. Dr. Sargent replied as follows:

"Your letter of November 24 was duly received. In answer to your inquiry in regard to breathing exercises I would say that there is no special objection to a man taking conscious breathing exercises as he is walking except that it is unnecessary. We breathe in response to the demands of the system for more oxygen. Sitting still, a man needs only a little air and breathes accordingly. While running, swimming or taking vigorous exercise a man breathes faster as the system demands more oxygen. What would you think of a locomotive puffing and blowing while it was standing quietly at the station? Forced draft is only needed when the locomotive is going at high speed or pulling a heavy load. The fatal mistake all the breathing cranks make is that no matter how much they breathe, the system can only take up so much as it needs by the effort of the body to keep warm and do its daily work. Loosen your clothes about the chest and waist, breathe through the nose, and then let the breathing take care of itself. Of course, if you lack freedom of movement in the walls of the chest, it is well to take breathing exercises to limber up the cartilages."

This fairly well expresses the editor's views on the subject. However, he is always desirous of giving the other side a fair show, especially as these various breathing exercises are not likely to do much harm, even if they don't do much good, although "abdominal breathing is said to have had ill effects." At the request of the editor, the following article has been prepared for The Times by David Ammann, of Hollywood, who is a student and teacher of the Mazdaznan school:

"We all breathe, but we don't think of the importance of that breath which induces power of mind and health of body. Ordinarily we breathe from forced habit, the natural breath. Giving it no thought, it stands to reason that negligence will induce negativeness. In this event, the system accumulates effete matter. If we don't empty our lungs sufficiently, the circulation of the blood and the promotion of nerve action will suffer and we lose control over the functions of our body. If we want brain and nerve power we need more control. Control comes through practice of a rhythmical breath. The lungs are the dynamos of our body, while the breath is its motive power. Without this motive power there would be no life.

"The question of our age is not so much as to the amount of muscle we have as it is to brain and nerve. If we have brain and nerve control we are not sick.

"Through breath we acquire, besides other qualities, electricity from the air, which is communicated through the lungs to the blood, from the blood to the nerve centers, the ganglia, which transform it into electrism, which is the builder of the body and the health. Disease is the result of insufficient generation of electrism in the nervous system. Electrism dissolve the effete and accumulated matter in the body, eliminates it and purifies the whole system. The more we breathe understandingly, rhythmically, the more thorough the purification and the control over the generating life fluids, the greater the consciousness of being and the individuality.

"Our consciousness and individuality begin with our first breath at birth and are developed according to our breath capacity, which can be increased by constant practice of deep breathing and evolution of the short natural breath into the deep individual breath. This can be acquired only by practicing it in certain positions and by concentration. The general belief that the individual breath can be obtained by taking exercises, walking, manual labor, etc., is a mistake. I was myself of the opinion that in working hard on my farm I could get all the qualities out of the air I need for my body, and could not be induced for years to take up systematic breathing, until I tried earnestly the Mazdaznan method of breathing, taught by Dr. Hanish. I was surprised at the results. I found not only that my mind was greatly exhilarated and more reliable, but also that the body went through a process of purification. Having been a vegetarian for sixteen years, I used to live on pure food. Consequently my blood was pure and my urine always of light color and transparent, but after a short practice of the individual breathing, I noticed that old accumulated matter was being dissolved and eliminated through the kidneys, the urine becoming dark and containing much uric acid, though at the same time I partook of less food, especially such containing uric acid or xanthine, as for instance the pulses. I could enumerate more similar cases, but space will not allow it.

"The main object of the breathing exercises is to increase the length and regularity of breath through concentration, which cannot be obtained by manual labor, and hard work, because we then breathe too quick, so that we cannot assimilate all the qualities of the air and the length of breath will not be increased. Health and length of life depend on the length of breath."

Dr. Parkyn, editor of Suggestion, says in regard to breathing exercises: "Would it not seem ridiculous if we found it necessary to instruct our horses or dogs how to breathe? These animals live almost altogether out of doors, take plenty of exercise, and in consequence breathe as Nature intended them to breathe."

At the same time, he admits the advantage of some form of breathing exercise, because it reminds a person to breathe deeply who might otherwise omit to do so, but he thinks there is nothing to choose between them. He is strongly in favor of what is known as "abdominal breathing" which he declares has a double effect. It enables one to fill his lungs to their greatest capacity, and the movement of the abdomen acts as a massage to the intestines and stomach. On the other hand, the Mazdaznan people are strongly opposed to abdominal breathing, claiming that it tends to promote sensual feelings. They advocate breathing from the upper chest, to promote spirituality.

Here are some extracts from the writings of the well-known hygienist, Dr. W. R. C. Latson, editor of Health, on the subject of breathing:

"The most valuable feature of any exercise is that it should necessitate deep breathing. The most beneficial habit possible to form is the habit of slow, full breathing. Throughout all nature, from the guinea pig, which breathes 140 times a minute, to the elephant, which breathes six times a minute, one rule holds good—the stronger the animal the more slowly it breathes. . . . It is usually stated that one of these breathing efforts is the correct one, and that the others are incorrect; also that the normal respiration for women is the clavicular and for men the abdominal. Such teaching could result only from a superficial study of abnormal models. . . . The first requisite, then, for proper breathing is correct carriage of the body. This is rare—so rare that, in an examination of several thousand cases, I have found less than 1 per cent. of normal figures. Ninety-nine out of every hundred people have curvature of the spine. . . . Very few people breathe properly. In an examination of several thousand cases the writer found less than 1 per cent. of men and women who made proper use of their lungs. It may be noted, in passing, that each of those found with normal respiration was remarkable for power in some particular line. Two of the men and two of the women found to be normal are famous vocalists. Two of the men were successful business men, self-raised from early poverty. One of the men was a burly negro, possessed of the figure and the strength of a Hercules. Another of the men is the greatest prize fighter that this country has produced.

"As a rule of general application, it may be stated that the capacity of the chest is an index to the mental and physical powers of the individual. The greatest men of all times and countries—the Napoleons, the Luthers, the Cromwells, the Daniel Websters—have been large-chested, deep-breathing men. The writer knows of no exception to the rule that the individual who breathes normally is a man or woman of power."

Following is an extract from a somewhat remarkable article contributed to the New York Sun, by Swami Abhedananda, of India, published some time ago:

"There is scarcely a person in a million who breathes in a rhythmic manner, or who has any sort of control over the breath. This must be acquired by hard practice. One of the great difficulties for an unhealthy person to overcome, in acquiring the art of rhythmic breathing, is the irregular change of breath, from one nostril to the other. In a perfectly well person the breath changes from one nostril to the other about every two hours; but in poor health the breath sometimes remains in one nostril for hours, and even days at a time. In such condition it is impossible to maintain rhythmic circulation.

"Did you ever observe the manner of your breathing when the mind is aglow with some great idea or engrossed with some tremendous problem? How regular and quiet the breathing becomes in such moments, but the motion is perfectly rhythmic. The nerve currents are moving through their channels without the slightest obstacle. The mind at such moments is in a profound state of concentration, which has been accomplished by the regularity of the breath, which has in its turn produced the regular nerve currents. We speak of watching a play or hearing a speech with breathless interest. We yogis in India try to emulate this lesson from nature. We go to some quiet place, assume an easy posture, in which the chest, neck, and head will be on a perpendicular line and the spinal cord will hang straight down. Then we practice this slow, measured breathing three or four times a day, until we have acquired the habit. The exercises are begun in childhood, and a yogi's breath is

When Benjamin Franklin made his Bifocal by halves two lenses of different strengths it was a improvement! They were a great convenience days were looked upon as a luxury, something favored few could enjoy. Therefore, most people years of age were obliged to have two separate tance glasses and near glasses, if they wished at both distances. As an improvement on the Ben bifocal came the so-called Perfection bifocal, made by ing out a semi-circle and inserting a lense of in its place; there also is made the cemented bifocal is the kind with the wafer pasted on that you almost ready to come off. Sunbrights California Food Co.

Gentlemen: Your food was recommended to me at a time when my 17-months-old baby was seriously ill. He was cutting his stomach teeth and was unable to retain his food. I tried all the well-known foods, but could find none that would remain on his stomach. His tongue was thickly coated with a greenish substance that would come off in little pieces. I tried Sunbrights and at the second feeding my little lad's tongue commenced to clear, the food stayed down and he commenced to mend. He has never really been ill since. Yours very truly, MRS. regular as the tick of a watch, under any circumstances, for he has acquired an absolute mastery of it.

Now, a person who has not acquired this habit should begin by practising fifteen minutes at a time, at sunrise, on resting at noon, at sunset, and on retiring. After a few weeks of such practice, if it has been done with a desire to concentrate the mind, he will notice that a change is coming over his nerves. He has become calmer and more serene, less liable to irritation and disturbance from his circumstances. If he continues to persevere, his health will greatly improve, wrinkles will depart from the skin, and it will acquire a sort of clearness and transparency, indicative of high thinking and clean living. The voice will grow soft. No yogi ever had a harsh, croaking voice, for the breath has as much control over the voice as over the nerves. It not only creates the rhythmic nerve currents, but it purifies and strengthens the nerves as well.

But we in India have another breathing exercise that enables us to reach a much higher state of psychic action. This is forcing the change of breath from nostril to nostril. The greater the reaction in any part of the brain the greater the concentration of all other parts to that part. Why do we speak of one's being absent-minded, while walking along the street? Because his mind is detached from the things about him and is busy with some strong reaction produced from within. Now, when we force the breath, we increase the rhythmic nervous flow, and consequently the reaction in the brain cells.

The spinal cord in every human being contains two major nerve fibers—one down the right side and the other down the left side. In the center of the cord is a very small hollow tube, open through the medulla, which connects the cord with the brain, and this tube reaches to the lower end of the cord. Western physiologists have never known what this hollow tube was for, for it is generally closed up at the lower end of the cord in the average person, who employs only the nerve fibers on either side for the transmission of the nerve currents. But the Yogi has found a most important use for this hollow tube, once he has succeeded in opening its lower end.

Connected with the cord at its lower end is a small bundle of nerve fibers, in the form of a triangle. This bundle or coil is a great battery, supplying nervous energy. By forcing breath from side to side and increasing the rhythm, one will be able to arouse this coil and force open its connection with the hollow tube in the cord. This done, a sweeping current is sent up the hollow tube to the brain. Now the current is open and every inhalation and exhalation of the breath keeps the current in rhythmic motion, passing through the great central nerve coil at the lower end of the spinal cord, surging up through this hollow tube, and reacting into the gray-coated cells of the brain. This nerve circuit is open in all real yogis, and that is why they can sit for hours and meditate and bring their minds to the highest state of detachment.

Begin this exercise by closing the right nostril with the thumb and slowly inhaling for four seconds through the left nostril. Imagine while doing this that you are sending a current down the spinal column. Hold your breath for sixteen seconds and try to imagine that you are forcing the current through this triangular nerve coil. Then close your left nostril and open your right, through which you are now to exhale the breath at the end of eight seconds. In this last you must try to imagine that you are drawing the current up the spinal cord. Then inhale through the right and exhale through the left. Do this for four times at a sitting, and practice three times a day—morning, noon and evening; always assume an upright, easy posture, in which the ribs will support the body and the spinal cord hang free. While in this exercise allow no one to disturb you.

Some persons will begin to feel the effects of this exercise in a very short time. For others it will take months. But its success means a revolution in the psychic existence of any person. A person of evil mind and body may acquire some power in this way, but only temporarily, for right thinking and right living are absolutely necessary to reach and hold a high state of the psychic existence, and there is danger for any person who follows these exercises and leads an unchaste life of becoming insane.

When one is well on the road to success, the mental phenomena sometimes appearing will often startle him. He will now and then see flashes of beautiful light, hear strains of sweet music, and smell most fragrant odors, which would be entirely imperceptible to the ordinary person. As the mind gains control the body seems to become lighter and much less sensitive to pain, hunger, thirst, and other animal feelings. The rhythmic thrill of the mental calmness and indifference to ordinary cares and troubles cannot be described to one who has not experienced this exalted state. You lie down and sleep to rest your body and mind, but you scarcely know what real rest is until you have successfully practiced these exercises. A real yogi never sleeps as you do. He simply rests in a state of consciousness."

The Mazdaznan people claim that this method of breathing should be practiced only by people who are advanced in the study of physical, mental and psychical training.

It is a good way to wind up this somewhat lengthy article upon a very important subject will be to reprint the following skit. It has been printed a good many times, in various papers, but is funny enough to justify printing once more:

"Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our livers, and our skin if it's not all stopped up with powder. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we slept.

"Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Our noses was made for breath and our mouths for food and to talk with.

"Women that stop in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they go out of doors.

"People in a room make bad, foul, unholy some air. They make carbonicide. Carbonicide is poisoner than a mad dog. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India and a Carbonicide got into the hole and killed nearly every one before morning.

"Girls and women kills the breath with corsets that squeeze the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys because their diagrams is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I'd wish I was a boy, so I could run and holler and breathe lots of air and have bright eyes and rosy cheeks, a big appetite, and a good diagram.

"Give me air or give me death!"

A Plea for the Speechless.

WHILE discussing the care of the human body let us not altogether overlook the bodies of our dumb friends. Read this, from an unidentified souece:

"I am the voice of the voiceless,
 Through me the dumb shall speak,
Till the deaf world's ear be made to hear
 The wrongs of the wordless weak.

"From the street, from cage, from kennel,
 From stable and zoo the wail
Of my tortured kin proclaims the sin
 Of the mighty against the frail.

"O, shame on the praying churchman
 With his unstalled steed at the door,
Where the winters beat, with snow and sleet,
 And the summer sun rays pour.

"O, shame on the mothers of mortals
 Who have not stopped to teach
Of the sorrow that lies in death's dumb eyes—
 The sorrow that has no speech.

"The same force formed the sparrow
 That fashioned man, the king;
The God of the whole gave a spark of soul
 To furred and feathered thing.

"And I am my brother's keeper—
 And I will fight his fight,
And speak the word for beast and bird
 Till the world shall set things right."

Another Asserted Cure.

A RECENT dispatch from Manila announced that a "positive cure" for leprosy had been discovered by American surgeons connected with the Board of Health. The method used is a system of X rays.

Better go slow in attaching much faith to this discovery. The X ray has proved to be disappointing in many cases and dangerous in others. Anyhow, you can no more cure leprosy by burning out the evidences of it, without removing the cause, than you can cure smallpox by scratching off the pimples.

Lemons.

THE following letter, addressed by the editor to Dr. Carr, editor of Medical Talk, explains itself:

"In replying to a correspondent you refer to the use of two lemons daily as 'such an enormous dose.' I cannot regard the use of two lemons daily as an 'enormous dose.' I suppose you are familiar with a 'cure' that went around the press sometime ago like this: Begin with one lemon a day and add one daily until you take twenty-five a day, then gradually decrease back to one. Of course, this is preposterous and dangerous, but in this section, where lemons are plentiful and cheap, and hundreds of tons go to rot every year, there are hundreds who habitually use the juice of at least half a dozen lemons daily, with apparent advantage to their health. I think, myself, that the juice of two or three lemons daily is reasonable, provided—and this is important—that it should be properly diluted, by being mixed with salads or other foods or with plenty of water and taken at various times between rising and retiring.

Lemons should be avoided by the thin-blooded or constipated.

Medical Legislation—XXXV.

DR. CARL SCHULTZ writes as follows, in regard to the case of the patient of Dr. Storey, who was arrested and fined for practicing without a State medical license:

"The result of the autopsy was sent to me by mail by our attorney, but my mail went astray. I saw the attorney yesterday; he told me that it exonerated Dr. Storey, showing that death was the result of the fall from the bridge, and other causes. The medical board intended to have Dr. Storey arrested for manslaughter, but could not do so after such result. This shows plainly that it was a case of persecution."

There are encouraging signs that the doctors are beginning to pay more attention to the prevention of disease—to become, as the editor has said, first-class shoemakers, rather than cobblers of old shoes. A large book of two volumes has recently been published, containing views of eminent physicians in regard to hygiene and the prevention of disease. The future work of medicine, said Dr. Henry Maudsley at the British Medical Association's Congress, which is being held at Leeds this year, will be mainly to prevent and stop the beginnings of disease, so that, in fact, everybody should die at last of old age, as every doctor himself ought theoretically to die.

That is just exactly what hygienists are doing, and for which they are occasionally hauled up and fined by some medical association.

The Internal Revenue Department has decided that the alcohol in patent medicines must be taxed. That is right. Why not, however, also tax the alcohol so largely used by doctors in their prescriptions? As the editor has frequently observed, poison is no less poison because it is "prescribed by a physician." There is a great outcry against patent medicines just now. That is all right, but don't forget that these patent medicines are no better and no worse than the poisonous drugs prescribed by the allopaths. Indeed, in many cases, they are much less harmful.

The following dispatch from Chicago was recently published:

"Experiments which may result in knowledge permitting the grafting of the heart of one animal upon another have been made by Dr. Guthrie and Dr. Carroll, of the University of Chicago. Hearts of dogs have been successfully moved up into the animal's necks, and there performed their functions. Circulation of the blood in dogs has been reversed without killing the animal, and many new things about heart action have been learned, according to Dr. Carroll, who will begin new experiments in October. 'What we have learned,' said Dr. Carroll today, 'gives us hope that some day we may replace a wounded worn-out heart in a human being with the healthy, youthful and strong one from a living monkey.'

"Dr. Carroll was formerly a surgeon in the French army, and is at the University of Chicago only to conduct his experiments. 'This work only is in its infancy,' he said."

Commenting upon this, a physician writes from San Francisco as follows:

"I enclose herewith an article published this morning by the Call, and ask you what it is? Is it nonsense, parading in the garb of science? Insanity driven to madness? Or an easy way of getting free advertisement of a strictly ethical M. D.? Take your choice, but it is to be regretted that the otherwise intelligent staff of a newspaper should honor such sensational, stupidly made up fibs with publicity at the head of its columns. Isn't this what is called yellow journalism?"

Here is a newspaper item sent in by a reader of this department:

"Two doctors at Brodhead, Wis., were called upon to treat the diseased foot of a little son of Paul Parkhurst. Amputation of the diseased member was finally decided upon as the only chance of saving the boy's life. Accordingly the operation was performed, and when it was over it was found that they had cut off the wrong foot. The father brought suit against the doctors, and a jury awarded him $10,000 damages. Last week the matter was settled up, the physicians paying him $5000. As to the professional judgment of the doctors, it is only necessary to state that when the medicine men left the diseased foot alone it healed, and is now sound."

The editor of this department has sympathy and respect for the honorable and conscientious physician. In his paper "Follies and Failures of Modern Medicine," he said:

"Let me here interpose that I have absolutely no quarrel with the physicians. As I have frequently said, the practice of the healing art is—or should be—the noblest of all professions. The conscientious physician works hard and encounters much unpleasantness, unreasonableness and ingratitude. He often has to leave a comfortable couch on a stormy night to visit a patient whose power of remunerating him is an unknown quantity. That is, some doctors do. Compared with the physician, who deals with present ills, the parson, who, in a comfortable study, prepares—with the aid of a concordance—a more or less able discourse on future eventualities, of which he knows just as much and just as little as you and I, has an easy job, indeed. It is not with the allopathic physicians, but with the system they practice, that I take issue, a system that is not only intrinsically wrong, but is constantly changing, so that the highly praised remedy of today is the discarded failure of ten years hence."

Recently, the editor was told of a case, in Davenport, Iowa, where an old physician died, who had no less than $80,000 of accounts outstanding on his books. Before he died, he had those books burned, so that people who could not afford it should not be called upon to pay their accounts. At the same time, he died possessed of only a few thousand dollars. This was a noble act, and worthy of all praise. If there were more physicians of this kind, and if the doctors would abandon the useless drug superstition, what a noble and useful profession that of medicine would become! There would then be no need for sumptuary laws, or the prosecution of those who do not belong to the allopathic school. At the same time "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

As mentioned recently in The Times, Dr. Benjamin F. Bragg, of Los Angeles, 86 years of age, and for fifty-three years a resident of Los Angeles, was arrested, for not having a license to practice medicine in the State. He claimed to be a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, also that he had served as an army physician and a surgeon during the Mexican war. He further declared that he did not charge a cent for his services, in attending a patient just before his arrest, and the statement is corroborated by the widow of the deceased man. He also says that he did not administer any medicine or drugs. Can't the "regulars" sweep a little around their own dirty doorsteps, and leave worthy outsiders alone?

A dispatch from Chicago announces that the health department menagerie of disease germs, containing some extremely deadly specimens, had escaped captivity, a crate of jars having fallen and broken, setting free the specimens. Better start in a strict quarantine, at once. Or perhaps a law might be passed, forbidding the microbes to operate without a license.

Torturing Infants.

THE following sensible article is contributed by Mrs. Janie B. Jones, 439 Avenue 56 W., Highland Park:

"Mortality among infants might be greatly lessened, if mothers would bear in mind that there is far more danger in hot weather than in cold for these tender little human plants.

"Cholera infantum, to which disease more than one-half the deaths of children under two years old is due, is a hot-weather ailment, and generally ceases with the advent of winter. While it is exceedingly fatal and difficult of treatment, yet, in this, as in many other ills, 'An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.' If baby is kept comfortably cool and properly nourished there is very little danger. The same is true of most of the ailments attendant on the teething period.

"The second summer, which is said by physicians to be the most fatal season in a human life, has much of its danger eliminated if the infant can be kept cool. In fact, it is far less dangerous to risk clothing it too lightly and exposing it to draughts than to keep it too warm. Any mortality report will convince one that a large percentage of the deaths among infants is due to the effects of hot weather plus erroneous treatment. Yet, instead of combatting these conditions, the great tendency of mothers and those who have the care of young babies is to add more clothing and cuddle them more warmly at the first signs of illness, no matter what its symptoms may portend.

"My nearest neighbor has a two-months-old baby, which is quiet enough in the mornings and late afternoons, but as Old Sol climbs to the meridian it begins to fret, and squirms and cries until the cool of the day brings a blessed relief from the biting, stinging heat.

"'Don't you think the baby may be too warm?' I ventured to suggest, as it lay fretting and restless that hot day last week. The thermometer stood at 101. A long flannel garment doubled back over the feet, a cotton comfort, a woollen wrap so arranged as to cover head, ears and part of the face, besides the more ornamental clothes, swathed the poor little helpless baby.

"'You know they are so liable to catch cold; I'm afraid to take anything off of her,' she answered, tucking the clothes lovingly a little more snugly.

"'But think how you would feel all bundled up in woollens, and not even able to move about and find a cool place. Why you and I have on just as little as we can decently wear, and are still uncomfortably hot,' I ventured to protest, in sincere sympathy with the unhappy infant. But she was too firmly grounded in the belief that the proper thing to do for babies is to keep them warm, and in case of any disturbance to add more clothes. A healthy sneeze, which is sometimes really essential to baby's comfort, as nature's way of clearing out the passages of the throat and nose, will send mother or nurse after additional wraps in a hurry, although overheating brings in its train indigestion and kindred ailments that are far more dangerous to health and life than a cold.

"The usual excuse for keeping a baby too warm is that otherwise it might have the colic. Oftentimes babies are subject to this ailment, accompanied by cold hands and feet, whether as a cause or only a symptom is difficult to determine. But in either case, the sensible thing to do is to have it wear little knitted woollen shoes, which will be found as effective as an entire dry goods stock in ministering to a purely local disorder.

"A learned physician was sent for in great alarm to see a tiny infant that had fretted sleepless for two days and nights. It was in the heat of summer, and the baby, half-suffocated, squirmed in helpless misery, a bundle of flannels and other warm coverings. Stripped, bathed in tepid water and dressed solely in a thin cotton slip and diaper, it had sunk into sound, sweet slumber before the nurse could lay it down.

"'Oh, doctor, aren't you afraid it will catch cold?' asked the anxious mother.

"'If it does we'll treat the cold,' he answered. 'But don't suffocate the child to prevent it.'

"It would add so much to the comfort and well-being of these helpless little ones if mothers would use more rational thought in caring for them and act out its dictates. If illness ensues, treat it as indicated, but do not kill the child to prevent the possibility of what may never come."

Impracticable Prohibition.

THE following letter was recently written by the editor to E. Elsworth Carey, associate editor of Suggestion, in reply to a criticism by Mr. Carey of a pamphlet written by the editor on the subject of the recent prohibition campaign in Los Angeles.

"Regarding the prohibition matter, it is not a question as to whether alcohol is or is not a great evil, but whether the use of it can be done away with or greatly lessened through prohibition. Experience shows that it cannot. Therefore, the next best thing is to adopt some measure that will lessen the evils of intemperance. You don't find Francis Murphy, who now lives here, working with these extreme prohibitionists. Also, how do you explain that, after twenty years of hard work and the expenditure of a vast amount of money in prohibition campaigns, the per capita consumption of alcoholic beverages in the United States is greater today than it was twenty years ago?

"I am surprised to find an intelligent man like you classing the selling of liquor with burglary. If you once begin along this line, where are you going to stop? If we prohibit people from eating and drinking what is harmful, then we should put a stopper on many things besides alcohol. For instance, coffee and tea, and the drinks sold at soda fountains, and fried pork, and many other things that are undoubtedly injurious to health. You say that coffee doesn't intoxicate. Perhaps not, but if you drink it as many Americans do, you a congested liver, and perhaps make you family when you come home. For my little light wine or beer is far better, point of view, than strong coffee two or day."

Years of experimenting and hundreds of dollars is the price paid by Mr. Hutchison and ers of the Hutchison Acoustic Co. of New York the privilege of offering to those suffering from impaired hearing and headnoises, the unpriceable again being able to enter into the joys of munion with their fellowmen.

Many know now of the modern scientific lieve headnoises and deafness with the aid of the or the Massacon; many have observed it relieve members of their own families or their friends. wonderful, simple scientific instruments are the the scientific world, and they bear the seal of this very conservative body, which merit only can

However, what is still more convincing and more consequence to the suffering, is the hearty ment of the deaf who use the instruments in and who without them would be in sound-receiving

The Gold Medal awarded by the Superior Jury Louis World's Fair in 1904, after the instruments in practical use there for six months, should argument; while the adoption of the churches, theaters and auditoriums in all world, only adds to the evidence, which has given dict by the most critical jury of being the only vice ever produced to enable the deaf to hear.

We will be pleased to test in our office troubled with deafness, so as to tell as far as forehand, if either instrument would bring sults. With the Acousticon we can do so with the Massacon, frequently. Therefore, we to call in person and if such is possible, write which are mailed free, to the Marshutz Optical So. Gretna Green.

MEMORIES AND ROMANCE. SOME CURIOUS CAS

From T. P.'s London Weekly.

many novels have been set to the old tune out by horse's hoofs on the road to Gretna Green? Hundreds no doubt, and yet Gretna Green all that it implies is not wholly romantic. There a good deal of squalid tragedy under the of romance, and black care jogged along with the But there were fine possibilities about Gretna that lift its marriages above those performed in Fleet, for at least it was a long way north, and the adventurer was often empty of pocket.

Fleet.

little volume called "Gretna Green and its Traditions" (Paisley: Alexander Gardner, 1s. net,) the writer, who disguises himself under the pseudonym "Clavering," has collected much information concerning the place of many weddings. Banns, it should be noted, first published in England in 1200, but it was not until that the consent of the church became necessary, and even then, that ordination being enacted by Council of Trent, it did not hold in this country. the civil law continued to regulate marriages until In that year, in the teeth of strong opposition, Hardwicke's act was passed, which enacted that person solemnizing matrimony in any other place church or public chapel, without banns or other should, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of felony and be transported for fourteen years, and that all marriages should be void." This put an end to the of the Fleet weddings, though up to the last they to increase; it is reported that in one register 217 weddings were celebrated at the Fleet on before the act referred to came into force. In week a Fleet parson might make as much as fees, like those at Gretna, depending upon the or generosity of the contracting parties.

Priests.

of the so-called Gretna priests was a worthy Gordon, who, being an old soldier, performed his in full regimentals, with sword and cocked hat. reputable predecessor was Joseph Paisley, a freebooter, who began to marry just about the of the passing of Lord Hardwicke's bill. The first elopement marriage at Gretna was the celebrated Edgar-Scott affair, which drew the attention of this country to a place hitherto insignificant. Edgar and Jean Scott, being followed by relatives to their marriage, evaded their pursuers by boat across the Solway. A violent storm upset and one of the unhappy relatives was drowned following tide; but the couple escaped to the side, and were married by Paisley, who took the to have the validity of the ceremony fully Then trade became brisk, and the drunken old did a thriving business. On one occasion he married wrong couples in a hurry, but the mistake did disturb him: "Aweel," he said, "jest sort yersels." was a man of terrific personal strength; he could poker across his arm, and straighten a cold with his hands, and it is said that in fits of he would, by a grasp, squeeze the blood from the of those who had offended him.

Celebrated Cases.

who lived to be an octogenarian, and at his weighed twenty-five stone, was succeeded by Robert Elliot, who had married Paisley's grand-daughter. his memoirs, in which are recorded some curious runaway matches, one of the most celebrated being that of Miss Child and the Earl of Westmorland. Miss Child was the daughter of a rich banker disapproved of the Earl's suit. "Your blood, my lord," he said, "but money is better." The lady, preferring the Earl to the money, they left at midnight for Gretna in a chaise and four having arranged that relays of horses should be on the road. Says Elliot:

Child, soon hearing of their departure, as quickly them, and having, through numbers of horses rewards to the post boys, gained ground con- at the last came up with them while changing Hesketh, in the forest, half way between Car- Penrith. Mr. Child, in a fury, jumped out of and shot one of the leading horses of the carriage; one of the Earl's servants at the same behind Mr. Child's carriage, and cut the leather the body of the carriage to the springs, The Earl proceeded with three horses, the fourth dying. Mr. Child, starting soon after, gone far before the body of the carriage fell which entirely stopped him, and he was to wait until he could get a post chaise to pro- consequently the Earl and the lady arrived at and were united long before the arrival of Mr.

remarkable story is that of Lord Chief Justice who arrived at Gretna in the usual chaise woman's clothes, accompanied by an elderly children. "When I first saw them," says took the elderly lady for the mother of the the learned Lord for the grandmother." of a waistcoat button through the opening revealed Erskine's sex, and he was married. Later he attempted to get a divorce, being legal he thought better of the abandoning the suit, lived contentedly with other. This was the famous Lord Erskine who was Chancellor to the Prince of Wales, and one of the finest orators ever heard at the English bar.

A Gracious Landlady.

The inn at which Elliot "married the folk" was kept by a Mrs. Johnstone, who had a tender heart for couples in distress. Elliot tells how on one occasion he married the son of a wealthy clergyman to a poor governess. The funds had almost given out before they reached Gretna, and the little that remained was flung to the post boys. But the landlady undertook to lodge them until a remittance arrived, and lodge them she did for four months, when an envoy was sent to pay the debts. Elliot, however, did not fare so well; possibly the ardent lover had repented his bargain. "I only got," says Elliot, "a promissory note for £20, which, when due, was not paid; after which I put it into an attorney's hands, and instead of getting the money, he brought me a bill of £12 for expenses, so that I had better never to have seen the party." It is a pity that many valuable registers kept by Elliot were destroyed. They were stored in band boxes and packed above a covered bed in which his idiot daughter slept. One night the unhappy creature set fire to the bed, and she and the papers were destroyed together. We have it on the authority of the memoirs, however, that during the twenty-nine years of what may be called his official life Elliot performed close on to 4000 marriages.

The Last Gretna Post Boy.

Nowadays Gretna has fallen upon quiet times, and the present "priest" has little to do. Occasionally a romantic couple will be married there for the sake of the village's associations, and now and then runaway farm servants patronize it. But these rare marriage parties are from the Scottish side, Lord Brougham's act of 1856 having made it obligatory for the contracting parties to have lived in Scotland a certain number of days. The last of the Gretna post boys, John Howe, was reduced to cleaning the windows of a bank in Carlisle, and while so employed he fell and was killed. Howe was a contemporary of Jock Ainslie, who, being employed in the posting establishment of the Bush Inn at Carlisle, had had great experience with fugitive lovers. And the post boys were naturally, in the main, the friends of the lovers. Howe was also at the Bush Inn until the posting business was abandoned and the demand for postilions had ceased. And now carriages no longer thunder across the border with timid beauty inside and angry fathers in pursuit, and it is just as well, perhaps, that we live in these more prosaic days, and that Gretna Green hears less of the jingle of guineas. But it will be long before its traditions, good or bad, are allowed to die.

Nature Study Clubs.

WHY NOT A SPECIALTY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

By a Special Contributor.

HERE in Southern California, where "all seasons are summer" is it not strange we have no regular club for nature study?

We most certainly do have clubs and clubs (and may their shadows never grow less)—but these indoor study and recreation clubs would gain much both of profit and pleasure, if, at least one day in a month, they studied or played out in the open air, where the habits of observation could be cultivated, and their interest aroused in the study of Nature's lavish handiwork in our own State. In the East, interest has been so awakened that clubs for nature study are being formed in all of the larger cities. Men and women search over hill and dale for specimens for herbarium and cabinet, and thus become thoroughly acquainted with the natural resources and beauties of their immediate vicinity; but by exchanging specimens and ideas with other clubs, they soon have an extensive knowledge of the flora, rocks, minerals, and fossil fauna of their whole State.

California affords one of the most comprehensive fields for nature study in the United States. In any branch we choose to take up we can find specimens for study almost at our very doors.

From the mountains to the sea is but a short distance, yet in this easily-covered space conchology is writing history for future generations to read. Entomology is hybridizing and producing new specimens of wild flowers, and geology tells unmistakably the history of our past; but the science which most closely appeals to us is that living, glowing, fragrant science we call botany, and California is rich in plant life, and no one can afford to be entirely ignorant of this branch of nature study.

One need not go far afield to find specimens for study, for plants have a riotous way of encroaching in our backyards, or in our neighbors' yards, and simply overwhelm any vacant lot with specimens none the less interesting because we call them "weeds."

Every season brings something to delight us. Even now, when the hills are brown and seemingly bare, a walk over them or along any quiet street will reveal many a bright bit of purple and gold.

California asters have a way of forlornly nodding their dust-laden purple heads at us as we pass by. It will repay you to gather a few, shaking the dust from their purple petals, and as they smile at you with clean faces, there will come a vision of yellow stubble fields gay with goldenrod and purple asters, deeper and richer in coloring than those you have gathered; and the dust and noise of the city fades away and once more you dream the dreams of childhood.

The great family of Compositae, to which the aster belongs, has representatives along the highways of the city, on hill and valley, the year round. Who has not seen some neglected corner bright with wild sunflowers, or the dry hills hiding their nakedness beneath a wealth of pretty (though not always sweet-smelling) tarweed.

As late as November one can find wild heliotrope in bloom. I do not mean by this latter the phacelia, which blossoms early in the spring and which the children call heliotrope, but the real and only species which should be so called—scientifically known as Heliotropium curvassavicum. The silvery white "everlasting" flower sometimes called "California edelweiss" is another member of this prolific family, and can be found in any unfrequented corner.

I have found, late in October, the scarlet Zauscheria (sometimes called wild fuchsia) brightening a rough, broken hillside, and on a damp bit of ground can often be found, late in the fall, a creamy-blossomed member of the Malva family, its crinkly leaves and delicate blossome making a thing of beauty.

If one chooses to go to the cañons for a day's outing, you will not fail to find many an interesting plant in bloom, even in the dry season. In sheltered places you can always find ferns, and if you do not fear to handle it, the gorgeously-colored leaves of the poison oak—the most beautiful "autumn leaves" nature ever painted—which will make an interesting study, and their pressed foliage, pretty souvenirs of a happy day.

I always remember with regret some of these richly-colored leaves which I reluctantly sacrificed to the fears of some good ladies who declared that they would be "poisoned" if they came within "fourteen feet" of my bouquet. A crowded car and a fourteen-foot quarantine presented difficulties, so I opened a window and, putting my face close to their bright beauty, I whispered a few words, emphatic enough to serve as my farewell to them, and then scattered them along the car track. I am a respecter of people's prejudices, but poison oak has ever been my friend, and I dislike much to turn the cold shoulder on a friend because others persist in giving it a bad reputation.

There is no rule to govern one in handling the so-called poisonous plants, except this—if you are afraid, do not touch them.

The joy we experience in becoming acquainted with our neighbors in the plant world more than compensates us for any little discomfort attending the accomplishment of such acquaintance.

Every person should be enough interested in the natural products of his own State to desire to know something of the peculiarities of the native plants, and to learn something concerning their haunts and habitat.

The only requirement the student needs is to have observing eyes and a love for nature, and all else will come with the seeking.

Nature is the tree of knowledge in this our California Eden. Its fruit is abundant and of various flavors to suit every taste; and if you eat of it, you shall not die, but rather you shall live and grow strong; for as you go about gathering the fruit of knowledge, you will "mix your blood with sunshine" and "take the wind into your pulses."

To all such comes the promise of life, and with this promise as your guerdon let us emulate the example of our eastern compatriots and study nature, but under far better conditions, for here in California she has done her noblest work. ELIZABETH A. LAWRENCE.

FACT AND COMMENT.

THE amount of money going into the improvement of real property in all the larger cities of America is astonishing. There never has been so much money spent in building before. There are several reasons for this. The present is a sort of transition epoch. It is a new century, and the new century will see a great many changes from the old order of things. Building has been brought to a state bordering on perfection more than ever known before. The up-to-date business structure or residence is the only kind that has much chance in these days. The increase in urban population has been so great and is going on so rapidly there is a steadily-increasing demand for more accommodations. The old-fashioned structure is being torn down to make room for one of modern appointments, and the two or three-story one is being removed to be replaced with one of six, or ten, or more stories.

—o—

Money Plenty.

Another reason for all this building is that money has been very plentiful. Everyone has been getting a little of this, and many have been getting much of it. The man of moderate means is taking advantage of the good times to secure for himself at least a cosy home. The man who has been paying rent for a place to do business in is going to be his own landlord. The man whose profits have been very large is "salting" away a part of the surplus where it will be safe from the fluctuations in the stock market or even in general business.

—o—

Secure Investments.

The facts becoming known in connection with the insurance companies and similar institutions are no doubt impelling many to seek safer investments for their money. There have been so many defalcations by the men who handle public moneys that it is very natural for many to look about for an investment which will not take much time to handle, and which will be an anchor to windward in times of financial storms. So many men who have stood high in public confidence have betrayed this confidence that men wonder how far the corruption extends and who next will prove unworthy of confidence. Under the circumstances, real estate attracts a great deal of capital which heretofore had been put into other forms of investment.

Will This Go on?

That is a hard question to answer. No creature is more like sheep than man. We are very prone to follow the lead of some other man rather than work out a course for ourselves. It is a popular thing now to invest in realty. Will it be so tomorrow? No one can tell. Just at this moment there is real money stringency at all the great centers. Should that last, and interest rates run high, people would soon forget that there was danger in putting money into this or that form of investment and would soon rush in to gain the large interest to be had. Plentiful supplies of money have led to great activity in income producing real estate. The opposite course would produce an opposite effect.

San Francisco Realty.

It is often a question what property brings in San Francisco. Here is a brief history of a piece of central property in that city. Five years ago a syndicate was formed there, headed by Isaias W. Hellman, president of the Nevada Bank, San Francisco, and of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Los Angeles. This combination bought the Blythe Block fronting on Market street just north of Grant avenue, and running along Market street to within about ninety feet of Kearney. The lots run back to Geary street and all along Grant avenue between Market and Geary. The price was $2,250,000. The frontage on Market street is about 450 feet. The depth is irregular, being about 91 feet on the east line and nearly 200 on Grant avenue.

—o—

Resale Now.

The price paid for the Market-street frontage five years ago was about $5000 per front foot. The population of the city was a little more than 340,000. Now be it remembered nearly twice the population of that city do business in the city. Besides it is the business metropolis of the Coast, with a vast foreign as well as domestic trade. A few weeks ago a small part of this Blythe block was resold, to be specific, about one-ninth of it. There is exactly 48 feet 9½ inches on Market street, 91 feet deep to Kearney on the easterly line, 118 feet deep on westerly line and 40 feet front on Geary street. The price paid now is $500,000, or a little more than $10,000 per foot for the Market-street frontage. There are something like 5000 square feet in the ground, and the price is therefore $100 per square foot. The sum is twice what the property cost five years ago. This is the highest price ever paid for San Francisco realty. The improvements are not valuable. The rentals amount to $20,000 a year.

—o—

Things to Consider.

There are some things to consider in comparing this value with what is paid here. This is about as good business property as there is in San Francisco. There are two frontages, making a total of nearly ninety feet. The depth is not great, but it averages 105 feet, or 52½ feet for each frontage. There is not a square foot of waste in the whole area. Taking the combined frontage, the price is only $5555 per foot. San Francisco now claims 425,000 to 450,000 inhabitants, with double that number of souls intimately connected with the city in Oakland, Alameda and other points on the bay and south to Menlo Park. It's a city of vast business, and with a very great commercial future before it. For purely business purposes the area available on the peninsula is very limited and cannot be extended. The buyers are real estate men of years of experience in the city, and are men of excellent judgment. It

Secure Investments.

The facts becoming known in connection with the insurance companies and similar institutions are no doubt leading many to seek safer investments for their money. There have been so many defalcations by the men who handle public moneys that it is very natural for many to look about for an investment which will not take much time to handle, and which will be an anchor to windward in times of financial storms. So many men who have stood high in public confidence have betrayed this confidence that men wonder how far the corruption extends and who next will be unworthy of confidence. Under the circumstances, real estate attracts a great deal of capital which otherwise had been put into other kinds of investment.

Will It Go on?

It is a hard question to answer. Human nature is more like sheep than [illegible]. We are very prone to follow the lead of some other man rather than mark out a course for ourselves. It is an easier thing now to invest in realty. Will it be so tomorrow? No one can tell. Just at this moment there is real money stringency at all the great centers. Should that last, and interest rates run high, people would soon forget that there was danger in putting money into this or that form of investment and would soon rush in to gain the large interest to be had. Plentiful supplies of money have led to great activity in income producing real estate. The opposite course would produce an opposite effect.

San Francisco Realty.

It is often a question what property brings in San Francisco. Here is a brief history of a piece of central property in that city. Five years ago a syndicate was formed there, headed by Isaias W. Hellman, president of the Nevada Bank, San Francisco, and of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Los Angeles. This combination bought the Blythe Block fronting on Market street just north of Grant avenue, and running along Market street to within about ninety feet of Kearney. The lots run back to Geary street and all along Grant avenue between Market and Geary. The price was $2,250,000. The frontage on Market street is about [illegible] feet. The depth is irregular, being [illegible] feet on the east line and [illegible] 30 on Grant avenue.

[illegible] Now.

The price paid for the Market-street property five years ago was about $5000 a front foot. The population of the city was a little more than 340,000. Now [illegible] numbered nearly twice the population of that city do business in the [illegible]. Besides it is the business metropolis of the Coast, with a vast foreign as well as domestic trade. A few [illegible] ago a small part of this Blythe [illegible] was resold, to be specific, about [illegible] of it. There is exactly 48 feet frontage on Market street, 91 feet [illegible] Kearney on the easterly line, [illegible] deep on westerly line and 49 feet on Geary street. The price [illegible] is [illegible], or a little more [illegible] per foot for the Market-street frontage. There are something [illegible] square feet in the ground, [illegible] the price is therefore $100 per square foot. The sum is twice what the property cost five years ago. This [illegible] highest price ever paid for San Francisco realty. The improvements are not valuable. The rentals amount [illegible] a year.

Things to Consider.

There are some things to consider in comparing this value with what is paid [illegible]. This is about as good business property as there is in San Francisco. There are two frontages, making a [illegible] ninety feet. The depth [illegible], but it averages 105 feet, or [illegible] for each frontage. There is [illegible] feet of waste in the whole. Taking the combined frontage, [illegible] is only [illegible] per foot. San Francisco claims 425,000 to 450,000 [illegible], with double that number [illegible] connected with the [illegible] Oakland, Alameda and other [illegible] the bay and south to Menlo [illegible] a city of vast business, [illegible] a very great commercial future. [illegible] purely business purposes [illegible] available on the peninsula [illegible] and cannot be [illegible]. The buyers are real estate [illegible] experience in the city, [illegible] judgment. It is quite probable that the purchase is for speculation. This is not certain, as the new owners are men of means. One thing more, the rentals, $20,000 a year, figure out a revenue of 4 per cent., gross on the price paid. After paying taxes and other expenses there would be a moderate income left on the money paid for the property. It is not a dead load to carry. With these facts in mind the price gives an excellent basis for comparing values here and there. There is said to be an agreement on the part of the purchasers to begin within a year the construction of a modern building on the ground. This seems to indicate that the purchase is an investment, not a speculation. This is good sense, but to pay a record high price for speculation is not the safest thing in business.

Value of This Department.

To the general public the value of the Real Estate department in The Times is very great. Particularly is this so of the Sunday review. Here are collected week by week hundreds of sales running from $300 lots to business property worth $50,000 to ten times that sum, and covering every section of the city, from the Arroyo Seco to the University of Southern California. There is no other easy way for the general public to arrive at any close idea of the value of property. It is not claimed that every item reported is at exactly the price paid. But very generally the correct figure is given and in no case is there any great discrepancy. At least there are very few. The real estate men have means of learning at least approximately the value of property. Yet they pay much attention to these pages in the Sunday Real Estate Section. They often have their own books in which all transfers with prices, when obtainable, are kept. The public may have a very good record by filing away these pages, week by week. When the value of a lot in any part of the city is desired, a sale made within a short time close to the place is sure to be found by reference to such a file.

Dangerous Sidewalks.

Many complaints come to The Times office concerning dangerous sidewalks in many parts of the city. In some cases, many cases, indeed, the complaint is of curbs that stand so high above the gutter that there is great danger of broken limbs on dark nights, when pedestrians cannot see how much of a step there is. Main and Ninth is one such corner; Figueroa and Sixteenth is another. There are very many of them. Some day the city will have a lawsuit on its hands, when some one breaks a leg. There should be a bridge at such points.

Police! Police! Police!

Loud complaint is made about the way vehicles are driven through the Third-street tunnel. There is a notice to go slow posted at each end of the tunnel. There is an ordinance providing a penalty for driving faster than a walk. In spite of this, all sorts of things on wheels, from a motor bicycle to a brick wagon, go rushing and thundering through the big cut at breakneck speed. There is a great deal of dust in the tunnel, and many pools of foul liquid. These whirling wheels raise the dust in a cloud and go splashing through the pools of filth, scattering this on sidewalks, men's shoes and women's skirts in an indiscriminate distribution of foulness. The tunnel is used by a great crowd of pedestrians, particularly morning and evening, and the noise, dangerous rush, flying dust and spattering filth do not tend to create the most serene temper in the souls of the public coming to business at one end of the day and going to dinner at the other. Will the police do their duty?

A SEVEN-STORY ONE.

The Equitable Savings Bank Building to Go on Corner of Spring and First Streets.

This page is illustrated with a cut of the new seven-story building about to be put up on the corner of Spring and First streets, where the Los Angeles National Bank is now housed. When this bank proposed to merge with the First National Bank, The Times told of the purchase of the real property by the Equitable Savings Bank, and the intention to erect here a fine home for this institution. The merger is going through, and as soon as the bank now occupying the premises vacates work on the new building will begin.

The new building will occupy all the ground space, 60x80 feet. It will be seven stories, steel frame throughout, covered with cream-colored cement. A light well will be put in on the north side. Every feature of the building will be fully modern, the rooms upstairs arranged with special reference to their use by lawyers. The location is near the Courthouse, the new Federal building to go on the corner of Temple and Main street, and the City Hall likely to go in the same block.

The estimated cost of the improvements is $75,000. Work will begin about April of next year. But as the present three-story building now on the premises will not be much disturbed, the Equitable Savings Bank will move on October 23 next.

The architects are Morgan & Walls.

This is a very important improvement for this end of the city. It is being seen more and more that the neck of land along Spring and Main from Second street to the Plaza is one of great importance. The Phillips building was one of the first large business structures put up in the city. The Bullard building is still one of the best here. The International Bank will build on the corner of Temple and Spring, and the magnificent Federal building is to be across Temple from this new bank.

To go away back, the late Col. R. S. Baker built the Baker Block far up Main street more than thirty years ago. For years it was the only handsome building in Los Angeles, and it is a handsome one now. Broadway from Second street to Temple is being very handsomely improved, and is to be more so. There is no "dead end of the town" anywhere in Los Angeles, and The Times is the only newspaper in the city which has had the sense to believe this and the patriotism to say so, not only to say so, but to insist that it is so.

The architects have shown much skill in making use of the three stories now on the ground. This will be done by putting several steel pillars inside the present walls from the basement to where the new building is to begin.

$8000 will buy a 9-room, two-story, strictly modern residence on Alvarado st., on a lot 50x153 to a 15-ft. alley. This is one of the biggest snaps we have to offer our clients this week. This house is north of a $25,000 residence and joins a very beautiful 40-ft. yard.

WILTON PLACE.

We have two very beautiful homes in Wilton Place, one of which is perhaps one of the best and most artistically built residences in the city. The price is very reasonable, only $10,000, and the lot is a corner, 74x175. The exterior of the house is finished in rustic style, shingled sides, cobblestone chimney and pillars; a high, well-built fence surrounds the back yard, while two large cobblestone pillars stand at the entrance to the cement driveway.

On the first floor is a very large reception hall, library, parlor, dining-room, kitchen, pantries, closets and big screen porch, with stationary washtubs, etc. All fixtures are extra fine; there is also a very large fireplace, and built-in glass door bookcase adds to the library. The entire lower floor is of the very finest polished oak, the woodwork is very beautiful, being of the best selected wood. The second floor is finished in white enamel of very finest quality and workmanship. The floors are all polished maple. There is a large bathroom, a large hall, surrounded by five roomy bedrooms and pass closets connecting several of the rooms, a large unfinished attic, and a cellar with a fine hot-air heating plant are among the improvements. This place is a good buy at $10,000.

Our other bargain on Wilton Place is a 10-room house, with polished oak floors on the first and second, the third floor is a play room, off of which are two bedrooms. $8000 will buy this beautiful home.

FOR SALE—TWO-STORY HOUSE, WITH 9 rooms; just one year old. It is in the southwest part of Los Angeles, where the air is pure and fresh from the ocean; very near Adams st. I will take one-half in cash and the balance can run on at 6 per cent. interest. My price is $4150. This is a price less than you can get any other such fine place in this neighborhood. The lot is 75x150 feet to alley. When the house was built everything was ordered of the very best. There are birch floors upstairs, and the hall and living-room are finished in weathered oak of beautiful graining, and dining-room in Flemish oak the same. White cedar is the woodwork upstairs and there are cedar closets. The bathroom is tiled and bath tub is 6 feet. The servant's room is off the kitchen, and has a separate bathroom. All these ideas I tell of go to show that the house is better than most that are built; which are put up just according to some builder's plans, who maybe only cares to get his money out of the job. Some man looking for a home will find this the place to suit him. Address OWNER, B, box 102, Times office. 15

FOR SALE—BY OWNER, TO A MAN WHO is in earnest about buying, I would like to enter into an explanation of my proposition better than can be given here. My house in the Lone Star tract is for sale—price $5000. It is on Arapahoe st. The lot is slightly above the level of sidewalk, good size for the vicinity, 75x140 feet, and large enough to display the house to an advantage. It has 8 rooms. Going into the hall, you find it square, 14x14 feet, with a pretty stairway. The living-room next is paneled and finished in mission style, with beamed ceilings; dining-room in burlap up to the height of plate rail; there are two pantries, good large cooling closet. All floors are of birch, ⅞ of an inch thick. Broad back porch; cemented laundry with tubs, and I saw to it that a good eastern furnace that really heats for occasional cold days was put in. A good barn is on the lot—room in it for 2 horses and 2 buggies. A good many comforts that you'd like in this place and everything is suitable to its general style. Address OWNER for further particulars and for an appointment to look it over. B, box 119, Times office. 15

HIGHLAND PARK.
THE MATCHLESS SUBURB OF THE CITY.

We have one you ought to see. A number of people have said it was the prettiest house they ever saw.

The appearance, however, is the least of its charms.

It was built to live in, not to sell. Built for comfort, convenience and durability.

The only objection the owner has is, that it is too large for a small family.

There are eight splendid rooms, cellar and storeroom, fitted with all modern conveniences; lot 50x150, nicely improved; the situation is exceptional, close to school, churches and fine car service. The view is rare, and the location the healthiest in the city.

PRICE $6250 AND
It is worth every cent of it.
Bring your money with you for you will buy it on sight.

FOR SALE—$24,000.

This is one of the finest homes in the city, being on beautiful Figueroa street, near Adams in one of the swellest resident districts in the city. This beautiful home has 14 large rooms and a reception hall, that has no equal in the city. On approaching the house we find a very large porch across the entire width of the house, which makes one feel like a millionaire, while sitting there viewing the handsome private equipages passing, and the many magnificent homes surrounding. As you enter the house you walk into a grand and most beautiful reception hall, 11x48 feet, handsomely tinted and decorated with a very large side entrance, off to a beautiful driveway, with balcony, in this entrance are two large built-in hall seats. The main stairway leading from this hall is a perfect model of the finest architectural work to be had. On the first floor you find six large rooms, parlor, library, dining room, den, breakfast room and kitchen, with large pantries, and all conveniences that one would have in such a home. On the second floor you find 7 rooms, 4 bedrooms, 3 of which have private baths, and mantels, and a fourth bath for the servants' room. On the third floor we find a very large billiard-room nicely ventilated and a large storeroom. The woodwork throughout the entire house is of white cedar, ivory finish and a great deal of it hand carved. The arrangement of this house could not be improved upon, and the tinting and decorating is magnificent. There are seven mantels in the house, and the fixtures are of the finest. Space will not permit us to tell all the nice things about this beautiful home. There is a fine two-story barn, with box stalls, and two rooms finished with bath, for coachman. The lawn and shrubbery surrounding the house is fine, and in the rear there is a beautiful fountain and fish pond, filled with goldfish. This house is handsomely furnished throughout with inlaid and hand-carved mahogany furniture and beautiful rugs and carpets, and can be had furnished. It is heated by furnace throughout. Photos of this place can be seen at our office.

—ON—

WESTERN AVENUE

IS BUILDING.

COME OUT AND SEE FOR YOURSELF.
This is the last call on present prices in this locality; the tide of higher values is rising and now is the time to act. Acreage is selling at prices that makes our lots cheaper proportionately then acreage. For instance, we can sell you lots in our Melrose Avenue tract, with street improvements, for only $400. The adjoining acreage has sold for $1300 per acre. We could only get 4½ lots to the acre, which at $1300 per acre is a ground cost of $290 per lot. The street improvements will increase the wholesale cost to $330 per lot at least. Do you think the owners of that acreage will ever sell a lot for $400 on easy terms? NOT MUCH. But we will right now, if you hurry. Remember our war cry, "Buy in the Western-ave. section between Hollywood and Wilshire blvd." Take the Colegrove car to Western ave., where our branch office is located and we will show you the place where your dollars will be safer and more active than in any other section of Los Angeles; and it only requires a few of them to make a deal.

FOR SALE—

GRAND AVE. ON THE HILL.
112 FEET BY 165 FEET.

Only 5 minutes' walk to shopping district, theaters, and all public buildings. Hence it's an ideal location for first class hotel or apartment house. As to value of ground for apartment house purposes, in this location read the following—viz. about 400 feet southeast of this, a lot only 60x140 feet with 26 room apartment house, is leased for 5 years at $170 per month; about 300 feet west of it, a 3 story apartment house on a lot only 60 feet by 77½ feet, on a lot only 60 feet by 77½ feet, is leased for 5 years at $210 month. It thus appears that the average annual earnings of these two properties is about 62 cents to a square foot, at this rate, (with same class of buildings,) the property we offer would earn over $12,000 per year. For a short time we can deliver this for $16,500, mortgage $10,000.

A GENUINE SNAP.

EAST FIFTH STREET.
Between Los Angeles and Maple.

Lot fronts 36 feet on Fifth st. and runs through the block 170 feet to Winston st., where it has a frontage of 52 feet; improvements of small value, though bringing in a good rental, which can be doubled soon—improved, this property will pay large interest, while growing in value; price far below surrounding property, therefore a big bargain for a few days only.

Seven hundred feet of 3-story pressed-brick buildings have been erected on EAST FIFTH between Main and San Pedro in year 1905. There are no surer values than on E. Fifth st.

A DOUBLE CLEAN CORNER.
$3000. $3000.
Here is a fact that is growing more patent as time goes by and the growth of our city shows lack of wisdom in laying out streets too narrow to handle the business of a great city; property on wide through streets simply must advance. Good corners on such streets are bound to be worth money. We are here offering one of the finest buys on the market. In a growing business center on an 80-foot street, through the city from boundary to boundary, a double clean corner, 50x125. This will double in value; improve it and it will pay a good income.
For the price, $3000, it is cheap.

The lot is worth more than double the price and to a buyer looking for a chance to make and at the same time have an income, this is worth investigating.

SPRING STREET. SPRING STREET.

East side, dirty side, worthless side. But if you find it impossible to get anything on the clean side of the street you might do well to buy on the east side, as the H. W. Hellman Bldg. the Braly Bldg. are on the dirty side, but I've heard that each has a long waiting list for offices and the rents are as in any building on the clean side. I offer 60 feet front, 180 feet deep to 20 foot alley, 2-3 has stores and 1-3 1 story, doesn't that equal 3-3, 2 stories?

Rented at low price (lower than Billy Garlands) $300 per month, $5500 PER FOOT. This property is in the very gizzard of the business center and will be for many years to come. With a good 10 story building, the Bralys have copyrighted the 12 story edition, the rents should amount to $5000 a month or more, ask your own architect and was he says I'll stand by if he says $6000. Inside of 7 to 10 years this property will sell for $7500 to $10,000 per foot. You don't believe it? Did you believe 5 years ago that it would sell for $5000 a foot?

We (that is, my creditors and I,) have a long option on this property. Remember it is midway between the Braly Bldg. (opposite the Angelus Hotel) and the Rob Rowan Syndicate 10 story building, to be opposite the Alexandria Hotel. Go and look it up, under there's a good place for a cellar on it. It's where there was a Chinese chop restaurant when I bought it, but it's now occupied by the Hy-Lo $2.50 ("No more, no less") shoe company, the old reliable, John Moriarity grocery store and the Pioneer Turkish rug store of Los Angeles. We have thirty-five thousand dollar value in elegantly situated beautifully improved Pasadena properties, which we can exchange for Los Angeles property; we want one good home worth from $16,000 to $20,000 for one piece; we want fine building lots and some cash for the other. Will consider anything good.

Thirty-one acres, pleasure resort on the banks of a lake in the great State of Ohio. A car line into the grounds; all necessary buildings, including theater and pavilion. Rented for two years, and the property rapidly increasing in value; lies directly within the oil belt of Ohio, with producing wells surrounding it, giving it prospective oil values. Will exchange this for business, residence, vacants or ranch property in Southern California. This piece of property is clear of encumbrance, and is worth $32,500.

We have 38 shares of stock in an established manufacturing plant located in California, whose entire business is on the Pacific Coast, and making money. The par value of this stock is $3800 and worth it. We want a piece of clear ranch property for this, and it will be well to investigate it.

It is in the consolidation; has sold for $1.50 per share par value $1, to exchange for real estate; also 12 shares dividend mill and mining company stock to exchange for real estate. These stocks will bear investigation.

This is not for exchange, but we want to tell you that we have a lot on W. Adams st. that we can sell at once for $1665, one-half cash, balance to suit, and this price is $335 under market.

We want to exchange the undivided half interest in a business block in Ohio; can exchange the entire property; owner lives here, and will give a good exchange.

PERSONAL—HAVE YOUR HANDS HONESTLY read and the many future events of your life accurately prognosticated by the celebrated, skillful SCIENTIFIC PALMIST, PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE, acknowledged by hundreds of the best intellects—his patrons, as the finest and most remarkable reader of hands in this country, and pronounced superior to Cheiro.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate humbug palmists, psychics, fortune tellers, etc., who scarcely know one line or mount from the other. A satisfactory reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of this wonderful science through years of critical study, with large experience, trained judgment, etc.

With astonishing accuracy health defects are pointed out. Careful advice given in domestic, love affairs, etc.; also of financial success or failure, changes, deaths, investments, vocation in life, and many other important things you should know.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of his profession, having read the hands of more celebrated persons—distinguished people all over the world—than any other palmist in this country. E. H. Sothern says: "I find your reading coincides with Cheiro's," and, "I am greatly interested in scientific palmistry." Paul Gilmore, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading; it is by far the most scientific I have ever had." Juliet Crosby, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Tod Sloan (famous jockey,) formerly read by Cheiro, says: "Your (Prof. Althouse's) reading is the most complete I have ever had, and can say for your work that it is wonderful." Burton Holmes, formerly read by Cheiro, says: "Your (Prof. Althouse's) reading is the most interesting I have yet had." G. A. Hall, shipping merchant, says: "The reading you gave me was a very valuable one." Also read the hands of Admiral Schley, Senators Clark and Pettigrew, Gov. Pardee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Fritz Kreisler, Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Sousa, Innes, Kryl, Creatore, Chiaffarelli, Modjeska, Marlowe, Caruso, Sembrich, Gadski, Warde, Kidder, Jefferson, Edison, Hobson, Wilton Lackaye, Jane Oker, William H. Crane, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, William Desmond, and hundreds of others.

Intelligent, high-class patronage solicited—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader. ALL BUSINESS AND READINGS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

ASTROLOGY AND HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of careful study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of ASTROLOGY, having had MUCH EXPERIENCE IN THE CASTING OF HOROSCOPES—on which he gives expert judgment. The events of our lives are brought about by fixed planetary laws, stamping our lives at birth, and indicating exactly what the future has in store for us; therefore every person should have a delineated HOROSCOPE.

THE HOROSCOPE is decidedly a GUIDE IN LIFE, and shows remarkable—almost incredible things, when properly cast, as it tells all about diseases, finances, love and the marriage partner, etc.; children, changes of all kinds, deaths, talents and many other important things which cannot be mentioned here—in fact, tells everything about one' self worth knowing, being in truth, one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

Scientific predictions—embracing all QUESTIONS OF LIFE—new undertakings, or information desired—for the present, immediate future and events up to the close of life, made by this science—WILL STAGGER THE SENSES. Readings by mail also.

PROF. ALTHOUSE, in his large and successful practice, has acquired a very experience of the anxieties, struggles, etc., of his fellow-men in life. HIS WONDERFUL PROFICIENCY IN HAND READING AND CASTING OF HOROSCOPES enables him to see for the future, both the good and evil. THE MOST PRIVATE CONFIDENCES ARE REPOSED IN HIM AND HIS ADVICE IS SOUGHT IN THE MOST DIFFICULT AND CRITICAL CIRCUMSTANCES. Daily and evening. Sunday 11 to 2.

SANDERCOOK.

I have what I advertise.
I know what I advertise.
To be what I advertise.

And as advertising is simply a method of bringing the buyer and seller together, I am in business to do so. My many years experience in merchandising makes me, I think, competent to judge as to values. Therefore, MR. SELLER, if what you wish me to handle does not come up to my standard of value, I will frankly tell you so and will not touch it. MR. BUYER, you who are seeking the opportunity, this method insures my presenting to you only propositions of real merit, and in every case I can assure you of a square deal.

If you wish to entrust your business to me, either as buyer or seller, and do not know me, I will be pleased to furnish you with the best Los Angeles banking references. I consider the proposition which I present today from the real standard, that of value the best ever presented in Los Angeles. A number of these have been placed in my hands, why? Because business men appreciate the fact that my business is conducted on the same lines as bankers. IN STRICT CONFIDENCE.

EXAMINE THIS LIST.

MY FIRST OFFER.
IS AN ESTABLISHED BROADWAY BUSINESS.
The best of its kind in Los Angeles. Fine location, long lease, low rental. This business has a patronage which calls for high-class goods, hence profits are large. The books show the profits to be from $1000 to $2000 per month net, according to the season. The sale of this business has been placed in my hands exclusively, it is not known to be on the market, and it has not heretofore been offered for sale, excepting by me. It will stand a rigid examination and will then prove up. The price is very reasonable, namely $25,000. To make myself clear, I repeat,
I have what I advertise,
I know what I advertise,
To be what I advertise.

MY SECOND OFFER.
Is a half interest to a good partner, in a first-class grocery, family liquor and meat store, which concern is as nicely fitted up and presents as good an appearance as any similar line of business in Los Angeles. $6000 has been offered and refused for the family liquor department alone. I believe this to be one of the best investments on the market today. A clean bright business, with special concessions that are enjoyed by no similar business that I know of. $12,000 is a low price for a half interest.

MY THIRD OFFER.
Is the exclusive right which covers nine States for a manufacturers' agency, for the sale of machines that are found in nearly every mercantile establishment in Los Angeles. Capital is required to extend the sale to other cities and towns for which the concern owns exclusive rights. $5000 will be required for this investment. The opportunity is a good one, room for expansion immense, profits large, present showing about $800 per month.

MY FOURTH OFFER.
Is in the grocery line, and in these I have several propositions which I have carefully examined, and know them to be exceptional good value for the money. Some of them carry leases at a very low rental, which of course is quite an item. Let me show you.

MY FIFTH OFFER.
Is a well located saloon business, with restaurant, east of Main street, well established, large stock, long lease, low rental. Over $20,000 will be required. This business clears over $1200 per month.

MY SIXTH OFFER.
Is a wholesale liquor business, well established, centrally located on one of our principal streets. The books are open for your inspection and show a good profitable trade. About $12,000 required, which buys stock at invoice, fixtures, etc.

MY SEVENTH OFFER.
Is a manufacturing plant, product covered by patents, with a demand for the product greater than the supply. Profits are large and less than $5000 is required to purchase a controlling interest. If desired, I can refer you to one of the leading wholesale firms in this city, they are thoroughly familiar with this business and will confirm my statement. Large orders now on file, profits show from 50 to 60 per cent. on investment.

MY EIGHTH OFFER.
Is an amusement business which can be run at a very low cost. Receipts are practically all profits, and the income is now from $7 to $10 per day, which can be largely increased. $2100 takes it away.

MY NINTH OFFER.
Is a half interest in a candy manufacturing concern, doing a fine healthy business and showing good regular profits. This is a rare opportunity.

MY TENTH OFFER.
Is two confectionery stores, location second to none in Los Angeles. One elaborately fitted with fixtures costing about $12,000. Price $15,000. The other which is less elaborate can be purchased for only $3000. Valuable lease with both at low rental.

MY ELEVENTH OFFER.
Is a half interest in a high class wholesale and retail grocery, bakery and candy manufacturing business, located in a Pacific Coast city. This concern has contracts with the United States government and does a business of $200,000 a year. It is a good clean, well established, profitable business, and less than $15,000 is required to buy a half interest.

MY TWELFTH OFFER.
Is a butcher shop, located on Seventh street, business about $1200 per month, without soliciting or delivering, and all cash. Good lease and low rental. Can be purchased for $1500.

MY THIRTEENTH OFFER.
Is a well established wholesale produce and commission business, together with all necessary equipment, including teams, etc., long lease, low rental, good list of customers and fine healthy and profitable business which can be purchased very low, if quick action is taken.

Phone 4665. W. SANDERCOOK.

MY MAGAZINE "INVESTING FOR PROFIT," for October, (which I'll send free,) is worth $10 a copy to any man who intends to invest any money, however small; who has money invested unprofitably; or who can save $5 or more per month, but who hasn't learned the art of investing for profit.
It demonstrates the REAL earning power of money—the knowledge financiers and bankers hide from the masses.
It shows how to invest small sums and how to make them grow into fortunes—the actual possibilities of intelligent investments.
It reveals the enormous profits bankers make and shows how one can make the same profits safely. It explains HOW stupendous fortunes are made and WHY they are made—how $1000 grows to $22,000.
To introduce my magazine, write me NOW, mention this paper and I'll send it ONE YEAR FREE.

KRUTTSCHNITT HARRIMAN TO

TEXAS CAN STAN INSURANC

PRESIDENT REPLI TO CZAR'S INVIT

KRUTTSCHNITT AND HARRIMAN TO CONFER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and operation of the Southern Pacific Company, arrived tonight from the East in his special train. He is here for the purpose of holding a conference with E. H. Harriman, president of the Southern Pacific, who is expected to arrive from the Orient about October 21.

Mr. Kruttschnitt refused to discuss the proposed railroad bridge across Carquinez Strait, but made the announcement that a large amount of rolling stock had been ordered for the improvement of the Southern Pacific service throughout the country.

Included in the order that had been placed by Mr. Kruttschnitt are 140 locomotives of the newest type, 6000 steel flat cars, 120 coaches and baggage cars and eight observation cars. Three steamers of 10,000 tons each have also been ordered for the Southern Pacific's Atlantic coast steamship service.

Another important announcement made by Mr. Kruttschnitt was that within three years it is planned to have a perfect block system in operation between this city and Omaha. He also stated that it is the intention of the company to transform the narrow-gauge line to Santa Cruz to a broad-gauge line as soon as possible. In the future all rails laid by the Southern Pacific will be of the ninety-pound instead of the eighty-pound variety.

Exactly what will be discussed by Harriman and Kruttschnitt during their conference here was not disclosed.

WILL BUILD TO COAST.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] St. Paul made another significant move today in its extension to the coast. W. L. Darling, chief engineer for the Rock Island, resigned suddenly, today, to accept the position of chief engineer in charge of the Pacific Coast Extension of the St. Paul. The sudden resignation of H. R. Williams as general manager of the St. Paul was to enable the company to place him in charge of the construction of the coast extension. The selection of these men, as well as the final decision to build to the coast, was made at the recent annual meeting of the company. Officials still deny any purpose of the Coast Line or that Darling is going with the road, but the denials, however, lack the genuine ring.

The surplus of the St. Paul, amounting to more than $30,000,000 and the authorized issue of new stock amounting to $25,000,000 places the company in a position to push extensions at any time.

TEXAS CAN STAND INSURANCE FIRMS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

AUSTIN (Tex.) Oct. 14.—State Insurance Commissioner Clay today made a report to Gov. Lanham of his investigation into the condition of the life insurance companies now undergoing an examination in New York. He recommends to the Governor that, inasmuch as he has investigated the solvency and management of the various companies and found them satisfactory in the main, he would suggest the State had no cause of action against the companies. Gov. Lanham said that, pending further developments in the investigation, he would take no official steps to deprive the companies of any of their permanent rights in Texas.

WOULD BAR FROM MARYLAND.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BALTIMORE, Oct. 14.—A petition alleging illegal and fraudulent methods of doing business was filed today with [illegible] I. Duncan, State Insurance Commissioner, in behalf of the late [illegible] C. Price, by Attorneys Barrett and Merriman, asking that the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York be debarred from doing business in Maryland. In the petition, it is stated that company is the legal successor of the Mutual Reserve Life Assurance Company of New York, whose license was revoked by Commissioner Wilkinson.

BECKHAM JOLLIES LAWSON.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

FRANKFORT (Ky.) Oct. 14.—Gov. Beckham today addressed a letter to Thomas W. Lawson at Boston, in which he expresses the belief that his declared purpose to protect policy holders against the officials of the life insurance companies is sincere and declares it to be praiseworthy, but declines to act on the committee suggested, thinking that precipitate action while the present investigation is on may impair rather than increase the advantage to be granted by policy holders.

DRYDEN ASKS QUESTIONS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—For the purpose of securing a comprehensive expression of public opinion on the question of national control of life insurance companies, United States Senator J. F. Dryden has sent out many copies of a circular letter with an appended list of questions to be answered.

PRESIDENT REPLIES TO CZAR'S INVITATION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The State Department today made public the invitation of the Russian government to a second conference at The Hague and the President's response.

These take the shape of two memoranda, one dated September 13, being an unsigned memorandum delivered by Baron Rosen to the President at Oyster Bay and the other a memorandum dated October 12, also unsigned, delivered by the President to Baron Rosen in Washington. The first memorandum is a mere recital of the opportuneness of another conference, with a promise to submit a detailed programme by Russia when Congress meets. The President's memorandum is a hearty acceptance of the invitation and directs attention to the fact that his previous circulars to the powers are shown to be precisely in line with the Russian papers. The last memorandum was delivered to Baron Rosen yesterday night for transmission to St. Petersburg.

"In view of the termination, with the cordial coöperation of the President of the United States, of the war, and of the conclusion of peace between Russia and Japan, His Majesty, the Emperor, as initiator of the international peace conference of 1899, holds that a favorable moment has now come for the further development and for the systematizing of the labors of that international conference. With this end in view and being assured in advance of the sympathy of President Roosevelt, who last year pronounced himself in favor of such a project, His Majesty desires to approach him with an appeal to the effect that the government of the United States take part in a new international conference which could be called together at The Hague as soon as favorable replies could be obtained from all the other states to which a similar proposal will be made.

"The course of the late war has given rise to a number of questions which are of the greatest importance and closely related to the acts of the first conference, the plenipotentiaries of Russia at the future meeting will lay before the conference a detailed programme which could serve as a starting point for its deliberations."

The following is the President's memorandum in response:

"On the 13th of last month, at Sagamore Hill, His Excellency, the Ambassador of Russia, presented to the President a memorandum, being a message from His Majesty, the Czar, to the President, to the effect that in view of the termination, with the cordial coöperation of the President, of the war and the conclusion of peace between Russia and Japan, His Imperial Majesty, as initiator of the international conference of 1899, deems the time a favorable moment for further developing and systematizing the work of that conference, and that to that end, yet, on being assured in advance of the sympathy of the President who last year pronounced himself in favor of such a project, His Majesty desires to approach the President with a proposal to the effect that the government of the United States take part in a new international conference which could be called together at The Hague as soon as favorable replies may be obtained from all the states to which it is to be made.

"The Secretary of State, by direction of the President, has the honor to convey to His Excellency, the Ambassador of Russia, the assurances which the President had the sincere pleasure of giving His Excellency at the time of the presentation of the memorandum of September 13. The President's circular to the powers of the acts of The Hague conference, which the late Secretary of State communicated to the several signatories, states through the American envoys accredited thereto, dated respectively October 21, and December 16 of last year, have demonstrated the President's keen desire that upon a favorable occasion the labors of the first international peace conference might be supplemented and completed by an accord to be reached by a second conference of the powers. The suggestion so put forth having been accepted in principle by the signatories, it only remained for the opportune moment to come for the powers to agree upon the place and time for their assemblage in order to perfect the beneficial agreements of the first conference.

"The President most gladly welcomes the offer of his Imperial Majesty to again take upon himself the initiation of steps requisite to convene a second international peace conference, as the necessary sequence to the first conference, brought about through His Majesty's efforts, and in view of the cordial responses to the President's suggestion of October, 1904, he doubts not that the project will meet with complete acceptation and the result will be to bring the nations of the earth still more closely together in their common endeavor to advance the ends of peace.

"As respects the further statement of His Excellency's memorandum of September 13, that, as the late war has given rise to a number of questions which are of the greatest importance, and closely related to the acts of the first conference, the plenipotentiaries of Russia, at the future meeting, will lay before the conference a detailed programme which could serve as a starting point for its deliberations, the President finds it in consonance with the indications of his circular of October 21, 1904, touching the questions to come before a second conference for discussion and the importance of completing the work of the first conference by ample exchange of views and, it is to be hoped, full concord upon the broad questions specifically relegated by the final act of The Hague to the consideration of a further conference."

CANDIDATES DISAGREE.

Republican Leaders in Massachusetts are Splitting the Ticket, Arguing Against Each Other.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A queer sensation has been developed in the Massachusetts gubernatorial situation between Curtis Guild, Jr., candidate for Governor on the Republican ticket, and Eben S. Draper, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor on the same ticket. The difference of opinion between them on the subject of tariff revision has developed into a wide-open split, and the curious spectacle is presented of one candidate, Guild, stumping the State for his party and advocating both tariff revision and reciprocity, while the other, Draper, is campaigning in deliberate opposition, favoring a high protective tariff.

An effort has been made to get Mr. Guild to drop his tariff revision and reciprocity plans, but he declares he has always stood for reciprocity and comes out squarely for it now, with tariff revision, that the public may know he stands where he has always stood. It was expected that Draper would not insist with such emphasis on his "stand-pat" policy, and the organization managers are in a quandary how to handle their candidates, driving in opposite directions.

BIG RESERVOIR SITE.

Government Has Decided to Use Gore Canyon in Colorado and Plans are Being Made.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That the reclamation service is determined to use Gore Cañon as a reservoir site is shown by the fact that the department has continued the work of collecting data and making maps of the Kremmling project designed to store flood waters for the irrigation of large tracts in the great southwest. The drilling on the upper site for the dam, about a quarter of a mile below the mouth of the cañon has been completed. At the office in this city the draughtsman are completeing the maps and the surveyors have nearly finished their data.

The original estimate by the new Century Light and Power Company as to the cost of the reservoir was 74 cents per acre foot of water. More liberal allowances have been made by the government engineers and their estimates show that at the outside the expense will not exceed $1 per acre foot.

LOUIS NAPOLEON ASSASSINATED?

STARTLING RUMOR COMES OUT OF THE CAUCASUS.

Storm Center of Political and Labor Agitation May be Transferred Next Week from Moscow to St. Petersburg—Getting Ready to Receive Prisoners at Vladivostok.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 15.—The Petit Caporal this morning publishes a rumor that Prince Louis Napoleon, Governor-General of the Caucasus, has been assassinated At Tiflis. There is no confirmation of the rumor in official or other sources.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 14.—The storm center of political and labor agitation may next week be transferred from Moscow to St. Petersburg, where the printers and the employés of several large establishments are now debating the question of a strike. A strike of printers has been declared in the government of Saratoff and no newspapers are being printed. A bomb was thrown today, but there were no fatalities.

The printers of St. Petersburg will hold a general assembly tomorrow, at which delegates from Moscow will be present. It will be determined by the assembly whether a strike shall be called.

The employés of the big Baltic and Nevsky shipyards are on the verge of a walkout. A majority of the St. Petersburg workmen are apparently desirous of continuing work, but if a strike is declared they are apt to be forced through sympathy or intimidation to join it.

Work has been resumed in a number of factories in Moscow and others will reopen on Monday, but the strikes of the printers and in some of the factories may drag on for several weeks with a constant liability of minor disturbances between the police and the workmen.

KOREA NOW DPENDENCY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

TOKIO, Oct. 15.—11 a. m.—Baron Hayashi, when interviewed by a Jiji representative at Osaga, said that the uprisings in Korea are not serious, the irregular mobs being without leaders. He declared that the peninsula is now practically a dependency of Japan. Adequate capital and wise foresight would certainly develop the natural resources of the country and make Korea the source of wealth.

Baron Hayashi arrived here today.

READY FOR PRISONERS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

VLADIVOSTOK, Oct. 14.—Barracks are being constructed at Egersheld, a suburb of Vladivostok, and arrangements are being made to receive prisoners there. It is desired to keep the prisoners entirely isolated from the population. Special baths for them are being built and winter clothing for 60,000 men is to be brought here, as many of the prisoners are apt to be lightly clad when they arrive.

BOMBS THROWN AT WARSAW.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WARSAW (Russian Poland) Oct. 14.—A bomb was thrown today at the villa of an English manufacturer. The cook and gardener were killed and the house was damaged. The bomb throwers fled, pursued by police. When closely pressed the fugitives shot and killed three policemen and then escaped.

DIED FROM SHOCK.

Dougherty Bank Scandal Causes Second Death and Peoria is Depressed by the Affair.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PEORIA (Ill.) Oct. 14.—The Dougherty scandal has claimed another victim. Driven to desperation and nervous prostration by worry over the disclosures compromising his bank and a fear of a disastrous run, Nelson Burnham, a venerable stockholder in the Peoria National Bank, died suddenly last night. He was 79 years old. Burnham owned 150 shares of stock and had been connected with the bank thirty years. His wealth was estimated at $500,000.

Following close on the death, Thursday night, of C. C. Lines, a former bank official, also caused by the shock of the scandal, the community is impressed by the far-reaching effect of the Dougherty affair.

CONSCIENCE FREE $2000 WORTH.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—A man who was not recognized in the Jersey City city hall gave yesterday City Treasurer Ely $2000. The stranger said: "Will you receive $2000 that belongs to Jersey City and give me a receipt for it?" "Conscience money?" "You may enter it that way if you like." The money was accepted and the man left unidentified.

M'KINLEY ESTATE IN LITIGATION.

SOMERSET (Pa.) Oct. 14.—A. F. Kennedy of New York filed exceptions today to the account of Mrs. Annie E. McKinley, executrix of the estate of the late President's brother. Mr. Kennedy alleges that about $80,000, representing life insurance policies on the late Abner McKinley, has not been accounted for by the executrix, and that Abner's share of the estate of the late President, amounting to $50,000 or $80,000, has not been divided among the creditors

HEARST VOTE HARD TO GUESS.

POLITICIANS CANNOT SIZE UP "GOOD THING'S" STRENGTH.

Wise Men of Brooklyn are at Sea on Existing Conditions—Republicans and Democrats are Both Confident—Willie Boy Has One Big Push Crowd in Brooklyn.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Never at the beginning of a political campaign have the Brooklyn politicians been more puzzled than they are this year. This arises from the fact that no estimate can be made of the vote that the Municipal Ownership League will receive in that borough. Mr. McCarren said yesterday that the third ticket could not prevent the election of the Democratic candidates, while the Republicans are confident that the Hearst ticket will receive so many Democratic votes that the election of their local ticket is assured.

Democrats were declaring ten days ago that they would elect their entire local ticket, but that confidence is now dissipated and the leaders realize it will take the hardest kind of work to pull through the local candidates.

W. R. Hearst has never shown his political strength in Brooklyn, and his efforts to organize the municipal ownership adherents did not meet with success. The propaganda for municipal ownership in that borough has been carried on by a Brooklyn organization with Coroner Flaherty at the head and with an enrolled membership of more than 10,000. This organization has come out squarely for the Hearst ticket, and Coroner Flaherty is on the local ticket as the candidate for Sheriff.

EARTH ROCKS AT SANTIAGO.

CUBA AND JAMAICA EXPERIENCE SEVERE TEMBLORS.

Several Persons Hurt, but None Seriously—Fright is Almost Universal—Italian Towns Again Shaken up and Sufferers of Past Suffer More.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HAVANA, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Reports from Santiago say that a series of earthquakes have created the utmost fear among the residents. The latest and most violent occurred at twenty minutes to 10 o'clock this morning. It drove a large part of the population out of doors. Several persons were hurt, none seriously, but fright is almost universal, as each successive shock seems greater than its predecessor.

JAMAICA SHAKEN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

KINGSTON (Jamaica) Oct. 14.—Two earthquake shocks of unusual duration, affecting the whole island of Jamaica were felt here this week. The first shock was Thursday evening and lasted nearly a minute. The second and more severe one occurred today and lasted for a minute and a half. The undulating motion of the ground made some persons ill. There was no damage to property.

THROWN FROM THEIR FEET.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Telegrams from the prefects of Reggio, Monteleone and Messina announce that there was a sharp shock of earthquake in these places at 3:10 o'clock this afternoon, strong enough to throw people off their feet. Many ruined walls fell and some houses were damaged. At the same time, a strong gale blew away nearly half the tents in which the population were camping, leaving hundreds exposed without shelter in a torrential rain. There was also an earthquake at Ajello, where several houses fell and three persons were killed.

GERMANY MUST BUILD UP NAVY.

ESCAPE FROM WAR WITH ENGLAND TEACHES LESSON.

Disclosures of Great Britain's Offer of Alliance With France Such That All the Apparatus of Agitation for More Warships Has Been Set in Motion.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BERLIN, Oct. 14.—The disclosures in France of alleged British offers of alliance against Germany are so thoroughly believed here that the powerful Naval League, with its 600,000 members, and all the apparatus of agitation is already moving for a new naval programme that shall further increase Germany's defensive resources against Great Britain.

Popular distrust of Great Britain has naturally swollen to great proportions and the semi-official denials in London can scarcely overcome the convictions now formed that Germany has had a narrow escape from a war in which, although she might have been victorious on land, would have resulted in her being crushed at sea and damaged along the coast, with the consequent destruction of her oversea commerce. The events of the last four months have silenced the opponents of a naval increase, except the Socialists and the Radicals.

While time and money beyond Germany's resources would be necessary to equal Great Britain's navy, not to speak of her future building, yet the feeling is that Germany must, for defensive reasons, build as many more ships as the country's finance will bear. The government some months ago decided to introduce in the Reichstag a measure substituting large for small cruisers in the authorized naval programme. Whether the government will increase the recommendations beyond this or not is not yet known.

ITALIAN ANARCHIST SENTENCED.

Dominio Rossi Goes to Prison for Forty Months for Making Seditious Speeches to Soldiers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ROME, Oct. 14.—An anarchist, Dominio Rossi, recently made violent speeches at Florence to some soldiers, inciting them not only to leave the army but to shoot their officers, if they were ordered to fire on the crowd in case of rioting. Rossi was arrested yesterday, summarily tried and sentenced to forty months' imprisonment.

An anti-militarist meeting was held here last evening, in spite of the fact that the authorities had prohibited it. A police officer ordered the speeches to cease. The orators, however, disregarded his orders, when rioting followed during the course of which many people were slightly injured and twenty persons arrested. The authorities have ordered an inquiry into the matter.

LABOR.

LABOR UNIONS DISCOURAGED.

BIG DECREASE IN NUMBER OF IOWA ORGANIZATIONS.

Over Half the Counties in the State are Not Cursed With One—Loss in Number of Dupes is Due to Activity of Employers and Stand for the Open Shop.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SIOUX CITY (Iowa) Oct. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Labor unionists in Iowa are depressed by a report of State Labor Commissioner Brigham. It shows a big decrease in the number of trade unions and that forty-five out of the ninety-nine counties in the State have not a single union. It is not doubted that this defection from the labor ranks was caused by the activity of the industrial associations and a declaration for the open shop whenever unions have made demands which employers thought not justified.

At the last biennial reporting period there were 850 unions, but now only 688 are listed. Of these 671 reported a total membership of 41,397, as against 44,722 reported two years ago by 762 unions. An average wage is now reported of $781.21 with an average savings of $97.06; average life insurance of $2205 and average fire insurance of $959.

NON-UNIONISTS SAFE.

ALL LABORERS EQUAL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SOUTH M'ALESTER (I. T.) Oct. 14.—The separate Statehood constitutional convention, which reconvened here today, voted unanimously to eliminate the clause in the Sequoia examination, providing that no discrimination should be made in the new State between union and non-union men.

Immediately following this action Editor Betts of the Unionist, the official organ of organized labor, announced that the unions would be with the separate staters, and that the convention called to meet at Muskogee, October 18, to fight the Constitution, would be turned into a ratification meeting. He declared that the elimination of the objectionable clause will add at least 3000 votes to the support of the Constitution.

MISSED HIS SMOKESTACK.

So Burly Swede Started Row, Was Thrown from Saloon and Landed in Receiving Hospital.

George Anderson, a burly native of Sweden, landed on the operating table at the Receiving Hospital at 11 o'clock last night with a beery breath and many groans. His right leg was fractured near the knee, and sundry cuts disfigured his face.

Anderson was a patron of the Swedish saloon at Main and First streets, and had a falling out with others in the place, when he found his pipe missing. He declared one of his Swedish brothers possessed the smokestack, and Anderson's forcible ejectment from the place resulted.

He landed on the curb with considerable force, and declared the injuries to his leg and face were received in this fall.

HUNTINGTON PURCHASE?

It was reported yesterday that the 700-acre Turner ranch at La Cañada had been purchased for $25,000 by H. E. Huntington, and that he would build a trolley extension there. The ranch is the property of Mrs. E. Turner of Pasadena. B. H Potter of La Cañada, who is agent for the Turner ranch, stated last night that he was unaware of any sale of the place, or of any deposit having been made for this purpose.

Golden State Limited Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The Southern Pacific and Rock Island systems today decided to inaugurate their Golden State Limited service to accommodate the winter travel to California, leaving Chicago Sunday, November 26, and leaving Los Angeles Thursday, November 30, with a through car attached to the Owl train for San Francisco.

BIG ROUND-UP OF WILD ELK.

VAQUEROS HAVE LIVELY CHASE NEAR BAKERSFIELD.

Success Attends Second Attempt of Year to Secure Animals for Sequoia Park—Boy Fatally Crushed Under Wagon in Runaway—Cook Dies of Burns.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BAKERSFIELD, Oct. 14.—The second attempt of the year to transfer a drove of wild elk from the ranch of Miller & Lux, a few miles from this city, to the Sequoia Park, was made this morning and as a result five big bucks were captured with lariats and are now on the way to the park in good condition.

About forty vaqueros from all portions of the valley are engaged in lassoing the elk. Rodrigues, head vaquero for the land company, captured the first elk and had his shoulder dislocated before he succeeded in throwing the big animal.

About a year ago the first attempt was made to round up the elk, which for years past have made the country in the vicinity of Button Willow their feeding ground. Two were transferred to the park at that time. The work will be continued tomorrow.

BOY KILLED IN RUNAWAY.

Rex Edwards, the fourteen-year-old son of J. Edwards, a prominent rancher nine miles south of this city, was killed this morning by falling from a hay wagon and having his head crushed beneath the wheels. He had gone to a neighboring ranch to help companions in the hay fields, when the horses hauling the wagon ran away, throwing him out. His family is well known in this city.

COOK DIES OF BURNS.

Mrs. Ada Parker, a cook in the Home Restaurant at Mojave, died at the County Hospital today from burns received in an explosion of a kerosene can in the restaurant on Thursday. Mrs. Parker accidentally dropped the can upon the stove. There was an immediate explosion and the woman was frightfully burned. She had no relatives so far as is known.

FATHER DEAD, CHILD DYING.

Sad Double Misfortune Overtakes the Hackett Family of Green Meadows. Widow Here.

Leonard Sackett, aged 37 years, was taken to the Receiving Hospital in a dying condition at 5:30 last night, as a result of being struck by car No. 96 on the San Pedro interurban line.

His right limb was fractured, the pelvic bone badly crushed, and the abdominal wall punctured. Sackett was suffering agony, and could give only a meager account of the accident.

Physicians utilized every available means for prolonging the man's life, but no hope for his recovery was held out.

Sackett is a resident of Green Meadows, a small station about nine miles from Los Angeles on the San Pedro line. He presumably became confused while attempting to cross the track and walked directly in the path of the car, which was going toward him at high speed.

He was struck on the right side, near the waist line, and sent flying through the air for a considerable distance. He was picked up by the crew and hurried to the city, being taken from the car by the police ambulance crew at Hill and Third streets.

Mrs. Sackett arrived at the Receiving Hospital from her home near Green Meadows at 10:10 o'clock and was taken to the bedside of her husband.

Although prostrated with grief, and with the knowledge that an infant child was dying at their home, Mrs. Sackett bore up bravely and conversed several minutes with her husband, who was perfectly conscious, but aware that he could not live long.

The Sacketts are in poor circumstances. There are four children, the youngest of whom has been ill for several weeks, and no hope for its recovery is held out. The case is a pitiful one, and tears stood in the eyes of husband and wife and all about them as the sad scene was enacted in the emergency ward.

The theory that Sackett had possibly purposely thrown himself in front of the San Pedro car was advanced by the detectives at work on the case, when it became known that the injured man recently lost an insurance policy. The matter is known to have preyed heavily upon his mind, and the first inquiry made of his wife was regarding this paper. Mrs. Sackett then admitted to the police that the family would be left in practical destitution by the death of the husband, and in case it was impossible to realize any of the insurance money their condition would be much worse.

Later—Sackett died at 1:45 o'clock this morning.

KING'S DAUGHTERS.

The King's Daughters have called a meeting for next Tuesday evening at 7:30 in the parlors of the First Congregational Church to plan for the coming of the founder of the order, Mrs. Margaret Bottome. All who are, or ever have been members of the order, are invited.

SAN DIEGO.

NEW HOME FOR ELKS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 14.—San Diego Elks are soon to have a home of their own. The building committee of the lodge has been working on the proposition for many months and has just decided upon a site for the new hall. The lodge is to pay $22,500 for the lot. A building suitable for a permanent home for the lodge and also for business offices and stores is to be constructed. The plans of the building have not yet been drawn.

BAY CITY BRIEFS.

A letter from Secretary Jasper, of the Chamber of Commerce, was received yesterday from the Portland fair, in which he stated that San Diego had been given two more gold medals by the jury on awards, one for the silk display and the other for the best exhibit of sea moss.

George C. Husmann, pomologist in charge of the viticultural investigation and experiments of the Department of Agriculture arrived in San Diego yesterday and today began his investigation of the viticultural resources of this county.

The Imperial Chamber of Commerce has adopted resolutions denying the allegations made by one George Y. Wisner, who is continually attacking the valley. He is a consulting engineer in the Reclamation Service, with headquarters at Detroit, has never been in the valley, but takes occasion to "knock" with all his might at every opportunity. The Imperial people ask the local chamber to adopt similar resolutions.

The San Diego Chamber of Commerce adopted resolutions yesterday which will be presented to the Board of Commissioners, who have in charge the selection of the site for the Pathological laboratory, favoring Riverside as the place for the laboratory.

ESCONDIDO.

MERE MENTION.

ESCONDIDO, Oct. 14.—Since the recent bond-burning here, there has been a noticeable increase in interest in real estate in this vicinity, dealers receiving many inquiries from prospective investors, while numerous visitors have arrived with a view to buying.

The grape crop, with the exception of raisins, is about marketed. Wine and table grapes brought good prices.

This season's shipment of hay, grain, hogs and cattle has been larger than ever before.

Rev. G. F. Mathes, the new pastor of the Congregational Church, will preach his first sermon here Sunday morning.

WALKED OFF MOVING TRAIN?

E. Post, claiming residence at Downey, was taken to the Receiving Hospital, at 8:30 o'clock last night suffering from lacerations of the scalp and possibly brain concussion. Post told of having started for Downey from Long Beach aboard a Salt Lake train yesterday afternoon. It is claimed he walked off while the train was moving rapidly, being in a dazed condition, and believing the train had arrived at his destination. Unable to inform the train crew of the location of his home Post was brought here.

CONTRACTOR'S ACCIDENT.

G. W. Shrimp, a cement contractor, was injured in a runaway yesterday morning. The horse he was driving became frightened in front of the Title Insurance and Trust Company's office, No. 129 North Broadway, dashed upon the sidewalk and overturned the rig, which was thrown through a large plate-glass window. Shrimp was injured by flying glass and bruised by his fall. His injuries were dressed at the Receiving Hospital.

WILL ENTERTAIN PIONEERS.

The Los Angeles County Pioneers' Society will entertain the visiting pioneers from Salt Lake City tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock with a banquet at the Café Bristol. Special guests of honor from Los Angeles will be Gen. H. G. Otis, Thomas Fitch and J. Ross Clark. Members of the local society will be charged $1 per plate. Thirty of the Salt Lake pioneers will be present.

STRUCK BY FAST CAR.

Because he failed to hear any warning from an approaching Pasadena car, John Barrera claims, he walked on the track at Macy and Howard streets last evening without hesitancy. As a result he was taken to the Receiving Hospital, suffering from bruises to his limbs, sustained by colliding with a fast car. Barrera is over 50 years of age, and resides at Sulphur Springs.

CHARGED WITH STEALING.

Frank Caulfield was arrested last night on complaint of Maurice Cohn of Cohn, Goldwater & Co., who claims Caulfield attempted to steal a wheelbarrow from a building in course of construction on Los Angeles near Second street. Cohn also declares that the prisoner stole a crowbar while leaving another building later, and was apprehended as he was disposing of it.

BICYCLIST RUNS INTO ANOTHER.

E. A. Alderman of No. 706 North Grand avenue sustained a dislocated shoulder and severe bruise in a collision with another cyclist at Pico and Hill streets at 6 o'clock last evening. Alderman was riding at a moderate rate of speed when the cyclist in his lead slipped and fell, the former crashing into man and bike.

Second Anniversary Sale

Mackie-Fredericks Co. Furniture 1903 Draperies MACKIE-FREDERICKS CO.

Monday morning will be the beginning of the greatest furniture sale ever inaugurated in Southern California. We give this sale to show our appreciation for the liberal support we have received during the past two years and offer you this opportunity to buy furniture, carpets, draperies, etc., at reductions never before made. On account of these unheard-of reductions the terms of the sale will be strictly cash. We can illustrate only a very small portion of the goods here, but not an article in our entire establishment has been overlooked.

In calling attention to this great undertaking we wish to boldly say that we are not and never have been, directly or indirectly, connected with any Furniture Trust.

A Furniture Trust Is Absolutely An Impossibility In Los Angeles.

We do, however, enjoy facilities in purchasing, transportation, storing and delivery which enaable us to sell our goods at from 15 to 25 per cent. lower than other houses less fortunately situated.

MAKING SURE TO APPEASE.

Chinese Extend Celebration Twenty-four Hours.

Putting Thousands of Dollars Into Odd Festival.

Gloomy Over the "Busting" of Splendid Dragon.

To make doubly sure of appeasing the evil ones, and to be dead certain that the spirits of those who have passed away within three years are raised to the next steps in the series of seven heavens, the Los Angeles Chinese have extended for one full day the "Feast of Dai Tsu," or Festival of the Dead.

Ordinarily this is a three days' festival, and it would have closed at midnight tonight. But untoward circumstances have prevailed in some of the arrangements, and in order to be on the safe side—or, rather, in order that the spirits of their relatives may be on the safe side—the local Chinese will continue the weird incantations in their little temples until Monday at midnight.

Then, with a parade of pomp and ceremony, the four high priests who have come from San Francisco to intone the petitions and prayers, will take out into the open space of the court in front of the main temple the paper horse and his valiant rider, the brilliantly colored statesmen with the abnormally developed stomachs, the carefully wrought banners, and other adornments of the temporary temple. With prayers and beating of tom-toms the priests will touch to the funeral pile the fires from sacred lamps, and in their minds' eye the Chinese will see the spirits of statesmen, noble horses, and other things arise from sordid earth to the heights of Confucianistic heaven, bearing the wishes of the people and the praises for their ancestors.

All day yesterday, and late into the night, crowds were attracted to Chinatown. This is the triennial celebration in memory of the dead, a festival instituted so long ago that even the ancient Chinese history has lost sight of its beginning.

The four high priests, attended by bright-robed altar boys, stood within the temple most of the day, and intoned prayers, intermingled with Chinese music. Twice did they make a procession through the main streets of Chinatown, stopping at the various little "Fan Chooks," or temples of rest for hovering spirits. At each stop there were libations of tea and pungent burning of incense, ascension of prayers, and beating of cymbals.

With no intermission for sleep the prayers will continue to rise until the feast is closed. This year the affair is attracting many Chinese visitors from outside points. They have come from as far as San Diego and Stockton. The expense of the strange festival will be thousands of dollars. A great public bulletin board has been placed on the street where the name of each subscriber to the funds will be posted today.

SACRED DRAGON "BUSTED."

At this season of penitential gloom there is extra cause for grave faces and concerned spirits. It is not generally known, even in Chinatown, but among the leaders of the tongs, the men who sit in the high places, the dread secret has been passed. With hushed voices, and seated behind the quaintly carved partitions these leaders have discussed the news.

The sacred dragon, pride and glory of Los Angeles Chinatown, is practically a ruin! It is "busted."

Worse, there is no money available to reinvest it with the old-time splendore; there are so few Chinamen left here that they feel they can not stand the cost of the sinuous serpent's rejuvenation. There can be no haughty prancing of the wiggling, horned head and curves of the long body before the temporary temple set up for the feast of Dai Tsu, and there is just this much less chance of appeasing the wrath of the evil spirits and pleasing the spirits of the beloved grandfathers, great-grandfathers and great-great-grandfathers.

"Woe, woe," say the leaders of Chinatown, "Henceforth and forever we shall never lend." For lending is how it all came about.

All eyes have been turned to Portland of late, and even the Chinese wanted to have their part in the great display. Now, the Portland Chinese have not prospered as well as their Los Angeles brethren, and they never could produce a dragon really worth while.

But who has not heard of the famous Los Angeles serpent, the monster that breathes fire and that requires 100 men for its vermicular demonstrations on Angel City streets?

With many good wishes for the increased prosperity of Los Angeles Chinamen, and with a thousand salutes to their illustrious ancestors, the Portland Chinese humbly requested the loan of the dragon for their great parade.

Local Chinatown [illegible] honored, and the great-ribbed monster was carefully packed, the rich silks and satins, the jewel-encrusted broideries and the delicately-colored canopies were laid in folds of lavender. The whole was insured for a goodly sum, and then entrusted to the tender mercies of the express company.

In due time the huge dragon coiled its way through the Portland streets and awed the spectators. Then it was repacked for the homeward journey. As a matter of economy the Portland Chinese decided that water transportation would be the thing, and the cases containing the very heart's pride of Chinatown were placed aboard a vessel. Alas, they forgot to insure the things!

When the boxes arrived in Los Angeles, the keeper of the dragon lay ill of pneumonia, and for several days the boxes stood unpacked. Finally, the keeper died, and was laid to rest, with all the solemnity of roast pig, hard boiled eggs and curd-cheeses, punk stiks and passage money for his sepulture.

Then the boxed dragon was found practically ruined by sea water. That is why it does not appear at the present festival. Three thousand dollars would be required to fix up this great "critter."

BILLIARD BANKRUPTS.

John A. Arakelian, who, with Sarkis O. Boyajien, conducts a billiard and pool establishment on North Los Angeles street, has petitioned in bankruptcy for the partnership. The firm's debts are $3357.65, with assets—principally stock and fixtures—of $798.05.

WATER—absolutely sure and permanent. SOIL—richest on earth. CLIMATE—more nearly perfect than any other portion of this globe.

We Will Sell You Land Worth $100 Per Acre for $65

We can do this because on our plan we are to participate in the profits from income while the deferred payments are being made. We will sell you any sized tract in multiples of 10 acres, to be IRRIGATED by FLOWING ARTESIAN WELLS. We will plow, seed and take care of your land and pay you one-half of the net profits from the income on the property during the term of 55 months you are making your payments and as long afterwards as you may desire on the same terms.

ALFALFA on our land can be cut from five to seven times a year, produces from 1 1-2 to 2 tons per acre at each cutting and sells from $4.00 to $7.00 PER TON IN THE STACK.

Profits from $30 to $98 Per Acre Per Year

FIGURE IT OUT YOURESLF—Your land costs at the most $65 per acre, your income from the same during the term of 55 months, less 12 months for seeding and after taking out our share, will, according to figures, amount to $53.75 per acre. At this very conservative estimate your land would only cost you $11.25 per acre and you then own highly improved alfalfa land actually worth from $100 to $200 per acre, which will pay you an income from $300 to $980 per year on each 10-acre tract.

Features to Consider:

Your land is increasing in value every year.
Alfalfa does not have to be replanted.
There are no bugs or worms to spoil your crop.
You will have abundance of the best and cheapest water on earth.
Your crops are sure and the market permanent.
Your land pays for itself.

We must make money for you in order to make money for ourselves. Your contract is absolutely non-forfeitable after twelve payments have been made. Your deed is placed in the Trust Company, when first payment is made, to be delivered to you on final payment. All payments to be made to Trust Company.

THE Y.M.C.A. AUTOMOBILE CLASS PROVES POPULAR.

Course Will be Repeated to Accommodate the Rush—Orchard Avenue Baptists Greet Their New Pastor. Gathering in the Summer Stragglers.

There has been considerable talk about the automobile school, which will be opened at the Young Men's Christian Association November 1, but the limit was reached yesterday, when the secretary received $10 by telegraph from a man in Brooklyn, who asked that a place be reserved in the class for him, and that in order to make certain of it he had transmitted the fee in advance. Nearly two hundred inquiries have come concerning the class, and it has been detremined to limit the number of pupils to fifty, but in order to meet the demand the three months' course will be repeated to accommodate all who wish to take it.

The school for employed boys has enrolled sixty-four pupils under two teachers, and if others come another teacher will be employed. In the class for plan reading there are twenty men, all carpenters, contractors and others in the building trades. All the classes are large, and every room in the building is occupied, as well as every room in the large house across Hill street, upon which the new building is to be erected.

Prof. D. M. Carpenter, teacher of mathematics in the Los Angeles High School, will address the men's meeting at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. Prof. Carpenter was a public speaker of note in Indiana, before coming to this city recently, and all men are invited to hear him.

The vesper service at the Young Women's Christian Association will be conducted by the secretaries tomorrow. Mollie Byerly Wilson will be the soloist.

RECEPTION TO PASTOR.

A pleasant reception was tendered to Rev. G. A. Cleaveland, the new pastor of Orchard Avenue Baptist Church on Thursday evening, the presiding genius of the occasion being George W. Dawson. The church was crowded and the social hour was varied by the serving of delicate refreshments. Addresses of welcome were made as follows: On behalf of the church, Rev. E. G. O. Groat; on behalf of the community, Rev. E. A. Healy; on behalf of the denomination, Rev. Arthur S. Phelps. A pleasing response was made by Mr. Cleaveland. Music numbers were given by Mrs. Bleecker Canfield and Mr. Rose. The people of Orchard-avenue church are much delighted with their new pastor, who is an able man in the pulpit and socially most approachable.

RALLY AT IMMANUEL.

As a means of gathering together the children of the Sunday-school who have been scattered abroad during the summer, Immanuel Presbyterian Church will celebrate today as a "rally day." FOR SICK LITTLE ONES.

Party of Girls Endeavoring to Secure Funds to Endow Children's Room in a Hospital.

Thirty-seven busy little maidens of Los Angeles are working diligently to add money to the fund which will make the Maria Louise room in the Children's Hospital a perpetually endowed place of retreat for little ones who are ill and who need the loving care and attention that are given to every occupant there.

It takes $5000 to endow a room for all time, though $3000 will purchase a ten-year endowment, and this society of little girls named the Maria Louise Society in memory of a playmate who died, is determined to work year after year until the perpetual endowment is secured.

A lawn fete and bazaar will be given in the grounds of the Cline residence at Adams and Figueroa October 28, when the girls expect to realize a goodly sum to add to the $800 they have already raised.

Every Saturday morning for months and months since the effort that was made last year, these girls have met and worked for two hours under the direction of their elders and have stitched dainty bits of needlework, have made all sorts of unique and useful articles that will be offered for sale at the bazaar.

In the green velvety close where the fete will be given are to be all sorts of attractions to tempt the pennies and the dollars from people's pockets and the irresistible maids who will be the tempters for the nonce have made many jolly plans.

"Alice in Wonderland" will be played, or at least extracts from that dearly beloved Alice, and Haydn's "Toy Symphony" will be rendered during the afternoon. There will be a wheel of fortune, of course, and a wonderful orange tree like the "Sugarplum Tree" that the poet wots of, and all sorts of other attractions.

The officers of the society which is getting up the bazaar are: Rae Belle Morlan, president; Louise Wells, vice-president; Daphne Drake, second vice-president; Sarah Clarke, secretary, and Alice Cline, treasurer.

The members of the Maria Louise Society range in years from associate members of 6 to the older girls up to 16. The ladies who are the advisers of the society are Mrs. Walter B. Cline, Mrs. Arthur Morlan and Mrs. Frank Burnette.

THE LOCAL SCHOOLS.

BIG GUNS TO BE ON DECK.

Prominent Educators Will Arrive Tomorrow.

Hottest Election Yet of the Star and Crescent.

Self-Government Success at the Polytechnic.

The prominent educators of the Executive Committee of the National Educational Society, who were to have arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, will reach here tomorrow, and instead of a reception at the Chamber of Commerce, there will be a general teachers' meeting at the Normal School auditorium at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when all the teachers in the city will have an opportunity to hear the visitors.

Dr. N. E. Schaeffer, president of the N.E.A. and State superintendent of Pennsylvania, is now one of the foremost educators in the country, and his mission on the Coast is to select the place of meeting for the national convention next year. He will be accompanied by the treasurer of the N.E.A., J. N. Wilkerson, who is president of the State Normal School of Kansas.

Dr. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education from Washington, who was to have come in the little party, will not be in Los Angeles.

STAR AND CRESCENT.

The hottest election for years was the Star and Crescent's, held at the Los Angeles High School, Friday afternoon, with nomination speeches full of spice and fire, and occasionally displaying oratorical flights. No dull and prosy proceedings this time, but talks that held from beginning to end, punctuated by the applause of keen appreciation with every school hit or rounded period.

Miss Alma Murphy made the speech which put the treasurer in nomination. It was one of the features of the election, and will doubtless furnish material for "Blue and White" predictions when that doughty journal arranges careers for the members of that class to come.

Forrest Ackley is the new president. He came out ahead in the closest race possible, for four popular candidates were running, and close behind him came Lester Finlay, Carroll Stilson and Wickliffe Mathews.

The senior B's nominated the vice-president from their class, two candidates running, Misses May Phillips and Ida Henry, Miss Phillips being elected. Rumors have been current in the school for some time that the senior B's would also seek to elect a secretary from their ranks, thus wresting the honor from the A II's, but the heads of the school interfered to prevent this high-handed movement, and one of the A II girls, Miss Helen Mead, was elected for that office, Miss Violet Thayer also being a nominee. Walter McCannell was elected treasurer without any opposition.

The senior B's have thirty-five members this year, and they are a jolly set, fully appreciating the advantage of numbers. They would have been glad to put up a president from their class, but the constitution forbids.

Spreads given by both classes followed the elections, the senior A's giving theirs in room 16, and the senior B's having a hilarious time in the old Polytechnic building, as no room is large enough to hold them.

NORMAL SCHOOL RECEPTION.

All-day Friday the Normal School up on the high hill was open for inspection by the public, the whole place being in perfect trim and wearing its most cordial aspect.

The funds, which were furnished by the State, have been expended in the thorough improvement and renovation of every part of the building, and the heads of the institution felt that an invitation to behold the results and the manner in which the money has been expended was due to the friends and well wishers of the school and to the public at large.

The gymnasium has been wonderfully improved with a new floor, and the walls ceiled on every hand in pretty maple wood presenting a different aspect from the former barnlike appearance. The old eyesore of a stove, which formerly was the sole means of heating this huge apartment, has been taken away, and the new heating apparatus put in connection.

Miss S. J. Jacobs is again the physical director, with much greater opportunity for her work in the improved surroundings. The new apparatus for the gymnasium that is soon to be added will be of the Swedish kind with bar stalls, affording the opportunity for large classes, and exercises especially adapted to women and children.

On Friday afternoon the first of the series of Friday recitals was given by the reading department under the direction of Miss Gill. "Back County Poems," from Sam Walter Foss and Ben King furnished the amusing and happy numbers given.

SELF-GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE.

For the past two years the Polytechnic High School has been disciplined by a self-government committee, each classroom being entitled to a representative, and the representatives so elected choosing their own officers. The new officers are: Carl Wirsching, chairman of the Boys' Committee, with Lester Jack, secretary; Ruth Dutton, chairman of the Girls' Committee, and Margaret Leth, secretary.

Already the Boys' Committee has had to handle several serious cases. "Ditching classes" was the offense of several pupils high in school authority, and prominent in affairs, and Friday afternoon they were called to face the court of their fellows. "They would rather face a teacher at any time than the Self-Government Committee," said one of the boys, and the sentencing of these students on Friday was a serious charge for the new committee. They gave the offenders ten hours to make up after school for punishment, and they recommended suspension in case the warning is not heeded.

POLYTECHNIC ATHLETICS.

The Athletic Association of the Polytechnic High School met October 3, and elected officers as follows: President, Carl Wirsching; vice-president, George McDonald; secretary, James Brewer; treasurer, Winnie Kimbrell; sergeant-at-arms, Carlos Solomon; football manager, Paul Frampton; baseball manager, Edwin Elliott; manager miscellaneous, Arthur Coover; football coach, N. Van de Verg.

Tomorrow afternoon at the last period there is to be a rally in the auditorium to induce interest in the football game, to be played at 3:30 with the U.S.C. football team on the U.S.C. field. Speeches will be made, and then the school will go in a body to witness the game. This will be a practice affair, to pick the team for the Polytechnic, about fifteen boys being put on during the play. The most promising candidates are A. Gifford, A. Burle, Ed Elliott, G. Damron, E. Wingett, H. Heizaman, D. Slaughter, Paul Frampton and George McDonald. The U.S.C. team outweighs the Polytechnic team fifteen pounds or more to the player.

THE MELON HARVEST AT MONTEBELLO

Montebello is in the heart of one of the choicest of the fertile sections of semi-tropic California. The owner of a five-acre lot in this beautiful tract, with small effort can make his land yield a comfortable income. In order to show what is actually being done by Montebello residents, we publish the following results:

$850 cleared on cucumbers on 7 acres in 5 months.

$800 cleared with dewberries on 2 acres.

$540 per acre cleared on 3½ acres of strawberries.

15 acres of popcorn planted between trees cleared $60 per acre.

The fertility of Montebello soil is attested by the character and wealth of its products, viz.: Oranges, lemons, olives, nuts, deciduous fruits, berries, alfalfa and all the vegetables.

Montebello has a water supply that for its permanence and quality is unsurpassed in the Southwest. Six and a quarter million gallons are always in reserve in 2 mammoth reservoirs. Five water shares are deeded with each 5-acre lot. Montebello with its many homes, its fruits, flowers, charming mountain and valley views and excellent transportation facilities—is the place of places for the individual who wants to invest his money where it will bring the most profit.

Five-acre lots may be secured from $270 and up per acre— 1-4 cash, balance in from 1 to 4 years at 6 per cent. Free excursions at 8 a.m., 11 a.m. and 3:40 p.m. Tickets may be secured at the office of D. O. Stewart & Co., 138 South Broadway. Tels. Main 1720, Home 1253. Office open Sundays from 9 to 10:30.
